MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

"APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.

"APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.

"CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.

"DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.

"DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.

"EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.

"EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.

"FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.

"NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.

"OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.

"REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.

"MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

SECT. 1.—DEFINITIONS, NATURE AND CHARACTERISTICS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—NEGLIGENCE.

1. Definition—Omission to do something that reasonable person would—Doing something that reasonable person would not.]—(1) A water co. having observed the directions of the Act of Parliament in laying down their pipes, is not responsible for an escape of water from them not caused by their own negligence.

(2) The fact, that their precautions proved insufficient against the effects of a winter of extreme coldness, such as no man could have foreseen, is not sufficient to render them liable for negligence.

It would be monstrous to hold defts. responsible because they did not foresee & prevent an accident the cause of which was so obscure, that it was not discovered until many months after the accident had happened (BRAMWELL, B.).

(3) Fire-plugs properly constructed having been inserted as safety-valves in these pipes, in pursuance of their Act, semble: the co. are not liable for not removing accumulations of ice in the streets over such plugs.

(4) Negligence consists in the omitting to do something that a reasonable man would do, or the doing something that a reasonable man would not do; in either case causing, unintentionally, mischief to a third party (ALDERSON, B.).—BLYTH v. BIRMINGHAM WATERWORKS CO. (1856), 11 Exch. 781; 25 L. J. Ex. 212; 26 L. T. O. S. 261; 20 J. P. 247; 2 Jur. N. S. 333; 4 W. R. 294; 156 E. R 1047.

2. —— —— ——.]—C. used to receive empty casks from B., sent by railway, which he filled with ketchup & returned. One day the railway co. delivered, by mistake, empty turpentine casks instead of B.'s casks, which being filled with ketchup spoiled the contents:—Held: C. could not sue the railway co., as neither a breach of any specific duty nor a misrepresentation was alleged.

Now, I myself am prepared to say that, wherever the circumstances disclosed are such that, if the person charged with negligence thought of what he was about to do, or to omit to do, he must see that, unless he used reasonable care, there must be at least a great probability of injury to the person charging negligence against him, either as to his person, or property, then there is a duty shown to use reasonable care (BRETT, M.R.).—CUNNINGTON v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. PART I. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

1 i. Definition — Omission to do something that reasonable person would —Doing something that reasonable person would not.]—Negligence consists in doing that which a person ought not to do, or omitting that which he ought to do, in disregard of the rights of others.—FERGUSSON v. UNION S.S. CO. OF NEW ZEALAND, LTD. (1884), 10 V. L. R. 279.—AUS.

3. —— —— ——.]—By negligence was meant substantially the doing by a person of some act which a reasonable & prudent man would not have done under the circumstances of the case in question, or the omission to do everything that could be fairly & reasonably expected of such a man under such circumstances (HUDDLESTON, B.). —SNOOK v. GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS CO., LTD. (1886), 2 T. L. R. 308.

4. —— —— ——.] — (1) [Negligence] may be defined as the doing of something which a person of ordinary care & skill under the circumstances would not do, or omitting to do something which such a person under the circumstances would do (BRETT, M.R.).

(2) What is the gist of an action of this kind? In the first place, there must be negligence on the part of defts.' servants for which defts. are responsible: they must have committed some breach of duty, either by omitting to do what they ought to have done, or doing something which they ought not to have done; secondly, injury must have been occasioned to someone by that negligence; & thirdly, it is a principle long established in English law that in order to maintain the action the alleged negligence must have directly caused the injury without any contributory negligence on the part of pltf. (BOWEN, L.J.).—WAKELIN v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. CO. (1884), [1896] 1 Q. B. 189, n.; 65 L. J. Q. B. 224, n.; 73 L. T. 615, n., C. A.; on appeal (1886), 12 App. Cas. 41, H. L.

5. —— ——.] — (1) It is not necessary to show that the precaution, if resorted to, would necessarily have had the effect of preventing the accident. All that is necessary, I think, to establish negligence is this, that there was a precaution which it was reasonable to resort to, & which, if resorted to, might by its ordinary effect have been the means of preventing the accident, & there was an omission to resort to such precaution (WILLES, J.).

(2) The train was coming at its ordinary speed & the morning was dark, & it was the time when the workmen would be crossing to go to their work. Surely, therefore, it was not an unreasonable thing to make known the approach of the engine by whistling; & I think, therefore, that there was evidence of negligence for the jury, &, consequently, this rule should be discharged (MONTAGUE SMITH, J.).—JAMES v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 634, n.; 36 L. J. C. P. 255, n.

6. —— Choice of doubtful course of action—Where alternative course clearly safe.]—It is negligence where there are two ways of doing a thing, & one is clearly right, & the other is doubtful, to do it in the doubtful way.

An attorney, on the part of his client, an execution creditor, had effected an arrangement with a third party to release him, on such party undertaking that the debtor should give certain bills, & execute a warrant of attorney to secure their payment; the undertaking to be void if the bills, etc., were not sent to the guarantor by a certain time; the attorney sent notes instead of bills; & guarantor sent them to the debtor, & the debtor signed them, but declined to execute the warrant of attorney; the creditor suing on the guarantee having averred in his declaration the giving of the notes as performance; & the declaration having been deemed bad on demurrer; in an action by the creditor against the attorney for negligence in not sending bills; whereby the guarantor was discharged, the debt lost, & the costs of the former action thrown away:—Held: the suing on the guarantee was not per se evidence of negligence; but the sending notes instead of bills was negligence, for which the attorney was answerable; because though there might be no substantial difference between bills & notes in such a case, it raised a doubt, & involved his client in difficulty, which might have been avoided. —LEVY v. SPYERS (1856), 1 F. & F. 3, N. P.

7. —— Absence of care or skill—According to circumstances.]—The definition of negligence is the absence of care, according to the circumstances (WILLES, J.).—VAUGHAN v. TAFF VALE RY. CO. (1860), 5 H. & N. 679; 29 L. J. Ex. 247; 2 L. T. 394; 24 J. P. 453; 6 Jur. N. S. 899; 8 W. R. 549; 157 E. R. 1351, Ex. Ch.; revsg. (1858), 3 H. & N. 743.

8. —— —— Which defendant bound to exercise.]—Gross negligence is a relative term & means the absence of the care that was requisite under the circumstances.

Gross negligence is ordinary negligence with a vituperative epithet. . . . Confusion has arisen from regarding negligence as a positive instead of a negative word. It is really the absence of such care as it was the duty of deft. to use (WILLES, J.).

The use of the term gross negligence is only one way of stating that less care is required in some cases than in others (MONTAGUE SMITH, J.).—GRILL v. GENERAL IRON SCREW COLLIER CO. (1866), L. 9. —— —— —— Injury to plaintiff without contributory negligence.]—Deft. supplied & erected a staging round a ship under a contract with the shipowner. Pltf. was a workman in the employ of a ship painter who had contracted with the shipowner to paint the outside of the ship, & in order to do the painting pltf. went on & used the staging, when one of the ropes by which it was slung, being unfit for use when supplied by deft., broke, & by reason thereof pltf. fell into the dock & was injured :—Held : pltf., being engaged on work on the vessel in the performance of which deft., as dock owner, was interested, deft. was under an obligation to him to take reasonable care that at the time he supplied the staging & ropes they were in a fit state to be used, & for the neglect of such duty deft. was liable to pltf. for the injury he had sustained ; whenever one person is by circumstances placed in such a position with regard to another, that every one of ordinary sense who did think would at once recognise that if he did not use ordinary care & skill in his own conduct with regard to those circumstances he would cause danger of injury to the person or property of the other, a duty arises to use ordinary care & skill to avoid such danger.

There was in a sense, an invitation of pltf. by deft. to use the stage. . . . Actionable negligence consists in the neglect of the use of ordinary care or skill towards a person to whom deft. owes the duty of observing ordinary care & skill by which neglect, pltf. without contributory negligence on his part has suffered injury to his person or property (BRETT, M.R.).

I in no way intimate any doubt as to the principle that anyone who leaves a dangerous instrument, as a gun, in such a way as to cause danger, or who, without due warning supplies to others for use an instrument or thing which to his knowledge, from its construction or otherwise, is in such a condition as to cause danger, not necessarily incident to the use of such an instrument or thing, is liable for injury caused to others by reason of his negligent act (COTTON, L.J.).—HEAVEN v. PENDER (1883), 11 Q. 10. —— —— ——.]—Pltf. was employed in a cooling room in deft.'s brewery. In the room were a boiling vat, & a cooling vat, & between them ran a passage which was in part only three feet wide. The cooling vat had a rim raised sixteen inches above the level of the passage, but it was not fenced or railed in. Pltf. went along this passage to pull a board from under the boiling vat. This board stuck fast & then came away suddenly so that he fell back into the cooling vat & was scalded. In an action under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42) :—Held : the defence arising from the maxim volenti non fit injuria had not been affected by Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), & applied to the present case, & there was therefore no evidence of negligence arising from a breach of duty on the part of deft. towards pltf., & pltf. was not entitled to recover.

The ideas of negligence & duty are strictly correlative & there is no such thing as negligence in the abstract, negligence is simply neglect of some care which we are bound by law to exercise towards somebody. . . . There may be a perception of the existence of the danger without comprehension of the risk : as where the workman is of imperfect intelligence, or, though he knows the danger, remains imperfectly informed as to its nature & extent. . . . Deft. in such circumstances does not discharge his legal obligation by merely affecting pltf. with knowledge of a danger which but for a breach of duty on his own part would not exist at all. But where the danger is one incident to a perfectly lawful use of his own premises, neither contrary to statute nor common law, where the danger is visible & the risk appreciated, & where the injured person knowing & appreciating both risk & danger, voluntarily encounters them, there is, in the absence of further acts of omission or commission, no evidence of negligence on the part of the occupier at all.

Knowledge is not a conclusive defence in itself. But when it is a knowledge under circumstances that leave no inference open but one, viz., that the risk has been voluntarily encountered, the defence seems to me complete. . . . It [contributory negligence] rests upon the view that though deft. has in fact been negligent, yet pltf. has by his own carelessness severed the causal connection between deft.'s negligence & the accident which has occurred; & that deft.'s negligence accordingly is not the true proximate cause of the injury (BOWEN, L.J.).—THOMAS v. QUARTERMAINE (1887), 18 Q. 17. ——.]—In an action against a railway co. for an injury alleged to have been caused by the negligence of their servants: —Held : a railway co. is bound to use the best precautions in known practical use to secure the safety of their passengers, but not every possible precaution which the highest scientific skill, according to speculative evidence, might have suggested; & if there are several grounds of negligence suggested, the jury must be satisfied that some one or other of them existed, & caused damage to the party injured, though they need not be able to ascribe the whole injury to either.

Negligence is not to be defined, because it involves some inquiry as to the degree of care required, & that is the degree which the jury think is reasonably to be required from the parties, considering all the circumstances. 24. Distinguished from imprudence.]—Where a man, during a procession held in his honour, imprudently, but lawfully & without any intention on his part so to do, acts in such a way as to incite others to commit damage, he is not liable for that damage.

I am unable to say that when a gentleman is canvassing, & accompanied by townspeople who are not his agents, & he does an act only of imprudence, on account of which they commit damage, that he should be responsible in any action of trespass. He has done nothing either directly or indirectly. All that the county ct. judge charges him with is imprudence. 25. Distinguished from fraud.]—What a man does through negligence he does not do from a fraudulent motive. Fraud imports design & purpose; negligence imports that you are acting carelessly & without that design. But what is meant is this; that conduct which might be negligent, or which might be attributable to negligence, is really attributable to a design not to know any more, & is, therefore, an indication that you knew that of which you desired to avoid the evidence (FRY, J.).—KETTLEWELL v. WATSON (1882), 21 Ch. 26. Distinguished from carelessness.]—Mtgees. of the interest of a builder under a building agreement advanced money to him from time to time on the faith of certificates given by a surveyor that certain specified stages in the progress of the buildings had been reached. The surveyor was not appointed by the mtgees., & there was no contractual relation between him & them. In consequence of the negligence of the surveyor the certificates contained untrue statements as to the progress of the buildings, but there was no fraud on his part:—Held: (1) the surveyor owed no duty to the mtgees. to exercise care in giving his certificates, & they could not maintain an action against him by reason of negligence.

The question of liability for negligence cannot arise at all until it is established that the man who has been negligent owed some duty to the person who seeks to make him liable for his negligence. What duty is there when there is no relation between the parties by contract? A man is entitled to be as negligent as he pleases towards the whole world if he owes no duty to them. . . .

If a man is driving on Salisbury Plain, & no other person is near him, he is at liberty to drive as fast & as recklessly as he pleases. But if he sees another carriage coming near to him, immediately a duty arises not to drive in such a way as is likely to cause injury to that other carriage. So, too, if a man is driving along a street in a town, a similar duty not to drive carelessly arises out of contiguity or neighbourhood (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(2) The law of England does not consider that what a man writes on paper is like a gun or other dangerous instrument, & unless he intended to deceive, the law does not, in the absence of contract, hold him responsible for drawing his certificate carelessly (BOWEN, L.J.).—LE LIEVRE v. GOULD, [1893] 1 Q. 31. Applicability to bailees.]—"Gross negligence" is a term properly used to describe the sort of negligence for which a gratuitous bailee is responsible: it cannot properly be said of an unskilled person who does not use skill: it is only applicable where a skilled person does not use the skill he has.—PHILLIPS v. CLARK (1859), 5 Jur. N. S. 1081; previous proceedings (1857), 2 C. B. N. S. 156.

32. ——.]—(1) The term "gross negligence" is not intended as a definition, but is useful as expressing the practical difference between the degrees of negligence for which different classes of bailees are responsible.

In an action for damages against a bank as bailees for the negligent keeping of certain railway debentures placed in their care by a customer, in the ordinary way of their business as bankers, it appeared that the box containing such securities, of which the customer kept the key, was kept in a strong room in the bank, with the boxes of other customers, & specie & other securities belonging to the bank. Access to this room was only obtained by passing through a compartment where a cashier sat by day, & a messenger slept at night. The strong room had two iron doors, which were opened by separate keys, which during the day were kept by the cashier who occupied the compartment. One of the keys was kept at night by the cashier of the bank, & the other key by another officer of the bank. Beyond this strong room there was two other rooms; in the outer of the two, uncoined gold, & in the inner, bullion & unsigned notes were kept. The manager of the bank kept the key of the outer of these rooms, & one of the directors of the bank that of the inner. The owner of the box had free access to the room where his box was deposited during banking-hours, in the presence of one of the bank clerks, when he had occasion to take out coupons from his debentures, for collection. While in such custody the cashier of the bank abstracted the debentures from the box, & made away with them:—Held: (2) the bank, as gratuitous bailees, were not bound to exercise more than ordinary care of the deposits entrusted to them, & the negligence for which alone they would be made liable would have been the want of that ordinary diligence, which a reasonably prudent man takes of his own property of the like description.

At the close of pltf.'s case, deft. applied for a nonsuit, on the ground that the bank, being gratuitous bailees, there was no evidence given of such negligence as to render them liable. The judge refused to stop the case, but reserved leave to move for a nonsuit. The jury found for pltf. Deft. obtained a rule to set aside the verdict, & to enter a verdict for deft., or for a judgment of nonsuit, & the ct. made the rule absolute for a nonsuit:—Held: (3) such course was regular, as it was the duty of the ct. to do what the judge ought to have done at the trial, when at the close of pltf.'s case there was no evidence upon which the jury could reasonably & properly find a verdict, as the judge ought to have directed a nonsuit, &, as in every case before evidence is left to the jury, there is a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally any evidence, but whether there is any evidence upon which a jury can properly proceed to find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the onus of proof is imposed.—GIBLIN v. MCMULLEN (1869), L. 33. No negligence without duty.] — In an action by the consignor of goods against the proprietor of a general booking-office for the transmission of parcels by coach, etc., charging negligence, whereby consignor lost his goods, it is not sufficient to prove that they never reached their destination or were accounted for. The office-keeper's duty is to deliver to a carrier; & some evidence must be given, showing specifically a breach of that duty. A tradesman, having made up goods by order, delivered them at a booking-office, with the customer's address, & booked them, to be forwarded to him, not specifying any particular conveyance, & no particular mode of transmission having been pointed out by the customer. Qu.: whether the consignor could maintain an action against the office-keeper

It was proved that deft. did fit up a wine cellar with brick & stone binns; but that pltf. afterwards required more binns to be made, & deft. consented to have the partitions carried up to the roof of the cellar. The workmen, however, by pltf.'s directions, erected the new partitions upon the centre of the slabs which covered the binns first made, & the slabs then gave way. defts. with any funds from 1876 for the payment of either the coupons or the bonds drawn for payment. Pltf., having subsequently discovered that his bonds ought to have been paid off in 1874, brought this action against defts., on the ground that they had been furnished with the money due to him from the Turkish Govt., & that they had negligently omitted to give him due notice of this fact. Defts. admitted that they had in 1874 had funds to pay off all bonds then drawn off, but it appeared that on a settlement of accounts between themselves & the Turkish Govt., made previously to the commencement of this action, they had repaid to the latter all moneys then in their hands, & which had been received by them for the service of the loan:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, as defts. had been under no obligation to give him notice of the fact of his bonds having been drawn, & had only been bound to pay off any drawn bonds brought to them while they still held moneys for the service of the loan.—NORGROVE v. IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK (1885), 1 T. Pltf., who was a stevedore's man, was employed by a master stevedore in unloading the barge. Stepping back to get clear of the crane which was hoisting the cargo, he fell backwards through the hatchway, which was uncovered, into the cabin of the barge. The accident occurred after dark. Deft. had not furnished the barge with a cover for the hatchway. Pltf. brought an action against deft. for compensation for the personal injury which he had sustained:—Held: the accident to pltf. did not directly result from any breach of duty on the part of deft., it being no part of his duty to see that the hatchway was kept covered; therefore the action failed.—O'NEIL v. EVEREST (1892), 61 L. 53. ——.]—Wagons belonging to the Caledonian Ry. co. were filled with coal from pits on that ry. co.'s system, & delivered to the Glasgow & South Western Ry. co. at Dumfries Station, who had an agreement with the Gas Comrs. of Dumfries to haul the coal from the station to the gasworks. The station & the gasworks were connected by the Gas Comrs.' tramway line running along a public street. The Glasgow & South Western supplied the men & horses to haul the wagons, & once the wagons left the Caledonian co.'s system they were not under their control. In conducting the wagons into the gasworks, two wagons at a time were taken along the tramway; but owing to a descent & ascent, one of the wagons was as usual uncoupled at the top of the descent, & the other taken on at a sharp trot to rush the ascent. While this was being done an obstruction got in the way, & the first wagon had to be pulled up; but the brake of the second wagon refused to act, & the husband of resp., who was in the employ of the Glasgow & South Western Ry. co., was caught between the two wagons & killed. Resp. raised this action against both ry. cos., & the question was whether there was a relevant case made against the Caledonian Ry. co. There was no averment as to the state of the wagons before they left the Caledonian Ry. co.'s system:—Held: resp.'s averments did not show that there was any duty cast on the Caledonian Ry. co. in respect to any one using the wagons on behalf of the Glasgow & South Western Ry. co. to take care that the wagons were in proper order after the coal had been delivered at Dumfries Station & therefore the Caledonian Ry. co. must be dismissed from the action.—CALEDONIAN RY. Pltf.'s husband was the manager of the co., & he & his wife resided in part of the premises let to the co. They had the use of a lavatory in which there was a flush cistern affixed to the wall some feet from the floor. Pltf. & her husband complained that the cistern was unsafe & in a dangerous condition owing to the vibration caused by certain engines belonging to defts., which were upon adjoining premises. Defts. thereupon sent their workmen, who fixed a bracket under the cistern to support it. Some months afterwards the bracket gave way & fell upon pltf., who was in the lavatory, & injured her. In an action to recover damages, the jury found that the bracket fell by reason of the working of the engines, which caused vibration amounting to a nuisance, that the bracket was negligently put up & was left in a dangerous condition:—Held: defts. owed no duty to her, & therefore she could not recover on the ground of negligence.—MALONE v. LASKEY, [1907] 2 K. The management committee of Lloyd's Register approved of the plans & supervised the building & gave a certificate that the vessel was of the 100 A1 class with widely spaced hold pillars. On her first voyage the foundations of some of the hold pillars gave way & the vessel was thereby injured. In an action by pltfs. against the chairman, deputy-chairman, & trustees of Lloyd's Register for damages for alleged breach of duty or negligence in passing the vessel as being in accordance with Lloyd's Rules when she was not:—Held: pltfs. had no contract with the defts., & defts. owed no duty to pltfs., & therefore pltfs. were not entitled to recover.

Applt., who was a customer of resp. bank, when on a visit to Canada, was given by the general manager of the bank a letter of introduction to the branch managers asking them, if he applied to them for assistance & advice, to place themselves at his disposal. He called upon G., who was the branch manager of the bank at V., & discussed the question of investments with him, & acting as he alleged, on the advice of G., he invested a large sum of money in an investment which turned out badly, & the money was lost. It was admitted that G.'s advice was given honestly. Applt. brought an action against the bank to recover the loss, & the jury found that G. had authority to advise him to make the investment, & the advice was negligently & unskilfully given, & judgment was entered for pltf. The Ct. of Appeal ordered judgment to be entered for the bank:—Held: although the point was not taken at the trial that there was no evidence that G. had authority to bind the bank, or that the bank owed any duty to pltf., it was open to defts. to raise the points in the Ct. of Appeal under R. S. C., Ord. 58, rr. 1, 4, & there was in fact no evidence of such authority or breach of duty.—BANBURY v. BANK OF MONTREAL, [1918] A. C. 626; 87 L. J. K. B. 1158; 119 L. T. 446; 34 T. L. 59. ——.]—Defts. owned two floating docks called the East & West Floats. A boilermaker, who was working for a contractor on a ship lying in the East Float, left the ship at 4.45 on a December afternoon to go to the latrine & was never seen alive again. There was a dense fog at the time. His way from the ship to the latrine lay southward across a piece of ground bounded on the east & west by the two floats & on the south by the waterway connecting them & then over a bridge crossing the waterway, the latrine being at the south end of the bridge. A line of posts & chains was placed round the three sides of the land which were surrounded by water. The chains were taken down from time to time to afford access to the quay, but the dock officials had instructions to see that they were kept in position so far as practicable. The man's body was found in the West Float opposite to a point where there was a gap in the line of chains, the chain having been taken down for the convenience of some men working on the quay & having been left down for several days. The quay side of the West Float was nearly fifty yards out of the man's proper course. In an action by his widow under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), against defts. for damages for the death of her husband:—Held: in the circumstances, the failure of defts. to keep the chain in position was not a breach of any duty owed by them to the deceased, & the action failed.

Semble: also, on the principle of Wakelin v. London & South Western Ry. Co., No. 4, ante, assuming negligence, the trial judge was entitled to find that pltf. had not proved that the negligence was the cause of the death.

It is not disputed that deceased man came within the class [of invitees]. He came upon the dock property & passed to & from the vessel where he was engaged upon business which concerned both the dock co. & himself; & he was entitled, subject to using reasonable care on his part, to expect that the dock co. should use reasonable care to protect him from any unusual danger known to the co. & not known to or reasonably to be expected by him. It is important, to bear in mind the exact nature of the applt.'s duty to deceased. It was not to give him absolute protection in whatever part of the applt.'s premises he might be found, but only to use reasonable care for his safety while he was upon their land & acting in compliance with their invitation & this duty must be limited . . . to those places to which he might reasonably be expected to go in the belief, reasonably entertained, that he was entitled or invited to do so (LORD CAVE, C.).—MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD v. PROCTER, [1923] A. 66. —— Implied promise.]—An innkeeper, though guilty of no negligence but even diligent, is liable for the loss or injury of the goods of his guest not arising from the negligence of the guest, the act of God, or the Queen's enemies.

Wherever a relation exists between two parties, which involves the performance of certain duties by one of them & the payment of reward to him by the other, the law will imply, or a jury may infer, a promise by each party to do what is to be done by him. Therefore an action may be maintained against the exors. of an innkeeper on his implied promise to keep safely & without diminution the goods of his guest. The exors. are also liable in "tort," the loss of the goods being a wrong committed within Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 2.—MORGAN v. RAVEY (1861), 6 H. & N. 265; 30 L. J. Ex. 131; 3 L. Where negligence is sought to be imported into such a case it is allowable to defts. to show that they & other carriers have been accustomed to deal with such goods in the same manner & without loss for a great number of years. Barber—Use of insanitary appliances.]—Pltf. in an action of negligence alleged that he had contracted an infectious disease through the negligence of deft., a barber, in using razors & other appliances in a dirty & insanitary condition. In support of his case he tendered the evidence of two witnesses who deposed that they had contracted a similar disease in deft.'s shop:—Held: as the negligence alleged was not an isolated act or omission, but was a dangerous practice carried on by deft., the evidence of these witnesses was admissible.—HALES v. KERR, [1908] 2 K. 91. General rule.]—Defts. were owners of a railway, crossed by a footpath on a level; there were gates on the footpath on each side of the line, which were fastened by rings attached to the posts. The rings were connected with a lever fixed in an adjoining signal box, & by means of the lever the rings could be raised so as to enable foot passengers to open the gates, or let down so as to keep the gates securely closed. Defts. gave instructions to the pointsmen in the signal box to let down the rings when a train was passing & to raise them at other times. These instructions had been generally, not invariably, followed, for two years. A., who was well acquainted with the spot, had occasion to cross the line by the footpath in question. On his arriving at the gate the ring was up, but a goods train was standing on the line immediately in front of the gate. A. waited till the goods train had passed & then crossed the line, & in so doing was killed on the further line by a down train. From the centre of the line A. could have seen three hundred yards up the line, but he crossed without looking up or down the line. In an action brought under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), to recover compensation for the death of A.:—Held: (1) there was no evidence of negligence on the part of defts., or, at all events, there was such evidence of contributory negligence on the part of A. as to justify a non-suit; (2) the rings by which the gates were secured were used by defts. as a precaution & not as a signal, & no action is maintainable for the omission to perform a voluntary duty altogether, although, if such duty is performed, an action may lie for gross negligence in the performance of it.

95. Building hay stack—Probability of ignition.]—Case lies against a man for negligently & improperly keeping a stack of hay put together in such a state as to be likely to ignite, & which eventually does ignite & his neighbour's premises are injured.

At the trial the judge told the jury that the question for them to consider, was, not whether deft. had acted according to the best of his skill & judgment in the adoption of measures calculated to avert the threatened danger, but whether he had acted with such a reasonable degree of caution as a prudent & careful man might have been expected to exercise ; & that, if they thought deft. had not acted with reasonable care & prudence, but had been guilty of gross negligence, pltf. was entitled to a verdict :—Held : this direction was substantially correct.—VAUGHAN v. MENLOVE (1837), 3 Bing. 98. Sewer—Escape of sewer gas.]—The duty of defts. is to take all ordinary precautions. No sewage authority is ever shown to have had reason to apprehend danger from the cause [escape of sewer gas] which occurred in this case, or to have ever used the precautions suggested. I am of opinion there is no evidence of negligence (CAVE, J.).—DIGBY v. EAST HAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1896), 13 T. L. R. 11.

99. —— Construction causing subsidence.]—Defts. having contracted with the London County Council to construct a sewer along Rockingham Street, Walworth, in the county of Surrey, opened up a long trench for that purpose in close proximity to pltfs.' buildings. A serious subsidence of pltfs.' land having taken place, & the walls & buildings belonging to pltfs. being greatly injured, in an action brought against defts. for negligence : —Held : the damage to pltfs.' premises had been caused by defts.' works, defts. had not exercised reasonable care & skill in the execution of the works, & the injury was occasioned to pltfs.' premises by the negligence of defts. in carrying out the works.—LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO., LTD., v. TILBURY CONTRACTING & DREDGING CO. 100. Building abutting on highway—Passer by injured by falling implement—Liability as between contractor & sub-contractor.]—Defts. were builders & contractors who after the outside of a house was finished had removed the outer hoarding & had employed a sub-contractor to do the internal plastering. One of the men employed by the sub-contractor in walking, shook a plank which caused a tool to fall out of a window of the house, & the tool in falling injured pltf. who was passing along the highway. The jury found that the hoarding had been properly removed, but that the injury was caused by the negligence of defts. in not providing some other protection for the public :—Held : (1) defts. were entitled to judgment, for there was no evidence that the falling of the tool was a probable accident which might reasonably have been foreseen, so as to make it the duty of defts. to provide against it ; (2) if it was the duty of any one to supply protection against the consequences of the falling of the tool, it was the duty of the sub-contractor & not of defts.—PEARSON v. COX (1877), 2 C. 101. Dangerous obstruction in street—Malicious act of third party.]—Where the proximate cause of the raising of an iron plate, lid, or covering of a water apparatus in a street of the Metropolis, above the level of the pavement so as to be a dangerous obstruction by sticking up, is the malicious act of a third person against which precautions would have been inoperative, the Metropolitan Water Board is not liable to any one thrown down by it & hurt, in the absence of a finding that the occurrence could or ought to have been foreseen & provided against. Although bound to exercise all reasonable care the Board is not, in the absence of such a finding, responsible for damage caused by the malicious acts of third persons. — SIMPSON v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD (1917), 15 L. D. was solr. to pltf. in a cause, & also to the receiver, & the receiver was in the habit of remitting the rents to him:—Held: D. must be considered to have received the rents as solr. as agent of the receiver, & pltf. could not call upon him to account for them under the summary jurisdiction.

The ct. has jurisdiction to charge solrs. with losses sustained by their clients from their misconduct in the prosecution of suits. . . . The ct. has constantly exercised this jurisdiction in cases of malfeasance. . . . Whether this jurisdiction, which undoubtedly exists in cases of malfeasance, extends to cases of mere neglect, I think it is unnecessary for us in this case to decide, but I am not satisfied that in principle any sound distinction can be drawn between cases of malfeasance & cases of nonfeasance (TURNER, L.J.).—DIXON v. WILKINSON (1859), 4 De G. & J. 508; 33 L. 103. Liability for original malfeasance—Injury through intervention of third party — Erecting barrier across road.]—Deft., who was in the occupation of certain premises abutting on a private road consisting of a carriage & footway, which premises he used for the purposes of athletic sports, had erected a barrier across the road to prevent persons driving vehicles up to the fence surrounding his premises & overlooking the sports. In the middle of this barrier was a gap which was usually open for the passage of vehicles, but which, when the sports were going on, was closed by means of a pole let down across it. It was admitted that deft. had no legal right to erect this barrier. Some person, without deft.'s authority, removed a part of the barrier armed with spikes, commonly called chevaux de frise, from the carriage way where deft. had placed it, & put it in an upright position across the footpath. Pltf., on a dark night, was lawfully passing along the road on his way from one of the houses to which it led. He felt his way through the opening in the middle of the barrier & getting on to the footpath was proceeding along it when his eye came in contact with one of the spikes of the chevaux de frise & was injured. It was not suggested that pltf. was guilty of any negligence contributing to the accident & the jury found that the use of the chevaux de frise in the road was dangerous to the safety of the persons using it:—Held: deft. having unlawfully placed a dangerous instrument in the road was liable in respect of injuries occasioned by it to pltf., who was lawfully using the road, notwithstanding the fact that the immediate cause of the accident was the intervening act of a third party in removing the dangerous instrument from the carriage way, where deft. had placed it, to the footpath.—CLARK v. CHAMBERS (1878), 3 Q. SUB-SECT. 2.—MISFEASANCE AND NONFEASANCE.

A. Definition.

104. Misfeasance—Improper mode of performing legal act.]—Deft. contracted with a local board of health to dig wells for them, according to a specification prepared by the surveyor: the works to be done to the satisfaction of such surveyor; & the digging to be done entirely under his direction: the surveyor to have power, if he considered the materials or works improper, of making the contractor remove them, or of removing them at the contractor's expense; & of ordering the dismissal of workmen with whom he should be dissatisfied, or of dismissing them himself: the board to have the power of making alterations & additions. Deft. was sued for having left a hole, excavated in working one of the wells in a highway, without light by night; whereby pltf., who was driving a carriage along the way, fell into the hole, & was bruised, & his carriage injured.

The action is brought for an improper mode of performing the work. How can that be called a nonfeasance? It is doing unlawfully what might be done lawfully. . . . The action here is for doing what was positively wrong (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—NEWTON v. ELLIS (1855), 5 E. & B. 115; 3 C. L. R. 1253; 24 L. J. Q. B. 337; 25 L. T. O. S. 140; 19 J. P. 805; 1 Jur. N. 106. —— Negligent performance of statutory duty—By public body.]—Defts., a local authority, affixed to a wall in a street which was not repairable by the inhabitants at large a plate intended to indicate the position of a fire plug in the water main & marked "F.P. 22 ft. 3 in."; in fact, a line drawn straight from the plate across the street for the required distance crossed the water main at a spot 6 feet 10 inches away from the place where the fire plug was inserted in the main. A fire broke out on pltfs.' premises, which were a short distance from the plug; the fire brigade were quickly in attendance, but there was considerable delay owing to their inability to find the exact position of the fire plug, as a result of which delay the fire assumed greater dimensions & caused more damage than it would otherwise have done:—Held: in putting up an indication plate which was in fact misleading, defts. were guilty of an act of misfeasance, & not of nonfeasance only, & they were therefore liable to pltfs. for the extra loss caused by the fire as damages for breach of their statutory duty.—DAWSON & Co. v. BINGLEY URBAN COUNCIL, [1911] 2 K. 107. Nonfeasance — Non-performance of duty — Created by contract.]—That there is a large class of cases in which the formation of the action springs out of privity of contract between the parties, but in which, nevertheless, the remedy for the breach or non-performance is indifferently like assumpsit or case upon tort, is not disputed. . . . In many cases it is extremely difficult to distinguish a mere nonfeasance from a misfeasance. . . . The contract creates a duty & the neglect to perform that duty, or the nonfeasance, is a ground of action upon a tort (TINDAL, C.J.).—BOORMAN v. BROWN (1842), 3 Q. B. 511; 2 Gal. & Dav. 793; 11 L. No consideration results from his situation as a carpenter, nor from the undertaking: . . . deft. has merely told a falsehood, & has not performed his promise; but for his non-performance of it no action can be supported. SECT. 4.—EFFECTIVE CAUSE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

118. Question for jury.]—Deft. negligently left his horse & cart unattended in the street. Pltf., a child seven years old, got upon the cart in play; another child incautiously led the horse on; & pltf. was thereby thrown down & hurt:—Held: (1) deft. was liable in an action on the case, though pltf. was a trespasser, & contributed to the mischief by his own act; (2) it was properly left to the jury, whether deft.'s conduct was negligent, & the negligence caused the injury; (3) the cooperation of third parties in the injury was not a ground of defence, if the means of injury were negligently left when it was extremely probable that they would be set in motion.

(4) The legal proposition, that one who has by his own negligence contributed to the injury of which he complains cannot maintain his action against another in respect of it, has received some qualifications. Indeed LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S doctrine in Butterfield v. Forrester, No. 745, post, which has been generally adopted since, would not set up the want of a superior degree of skill or care as a bar to the claim for redress: ordinary care must mean that degree of care which may reasonably be expected from a person in pltf.'s situation: & this would evidently be very small indeed in so young a child. . . . But the question remains, can pltf. then, consistently with the authorities, maintain his action, having been at least equally in fault. The answer is that, supposing that fact ascertained by the jury, but to this extent, that he merely indulged the natural instinct of a child in amusing himself with the empty cart & deserted horse, then we think that deft. cannot be permitted to avail himself of that fact. The most blameable carelessness of his servant having tempted the child, he ought not to reproach the child with yielding to that temptation. He has been the real & only cause of the mischief. He has been deficient in ordinary care: the child, acting without prudence or thought, has, however, shown these qualities in as great a degree as he could be expected to possess them. His misconduct bears no proportion to that of deft. which produced it (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—LYNCH v. NURDIN (1841), 1 Q. B. 29; Arn. & H. 158; 4 Per. & Dav. 672; 10 L. J. Q. B. 73; 5 J. 119. ——.]—In an action for negligence, it appeared that pltf. was a passenger on an omnibus which was racing with deft.'s omnibus, &, in trying to avoid a cart, a wheel of deft.'s omnibus came in contact with the step of the omnibus on which pltf. was riding, which caused the latter to swing towards the kerbstone, & the speed rendering it impossible to pull up, the seat on which pltf. sat struck against a lamppost, & he was thrown off:—Held: the jury were properly directed, that pltf. was not disentitled to recover merely because the omnibus on which he sat was driving at a furious rate; &, if the jury thought that the collision took place from the negligence of deft.'s omnibus, so that the other omnibus was not in fault in not endeavouring to avoid the accident deft. was liable.

Every person who does a wrong, is at least responsible for all the mischievous consequences that may reasonably be expected to result, under ordinary circumstances, from such misconduct; & I think that, in the situation of these parties, any distinction which I might be disposed to draw in an extreme case, does not arise in the one which is now before the ct. 123. —— ——.]—A person who is guilty of negligence, & thereby produces injury to another, cannot set up as a defence, that part of the mischief would not have arisen if the person injured had not himself been guilty of some negligence.

Therefore, where pltf., a passenger on board a steamboat, was injured by the falling of an anchor, caused by the deft.'s steamboat striking the other steamboat:—Held: it was improper to direct the jury, that, if they thought the collision was owing to the bad navigation of deft.'s steamboat they should find for pltf., unless there was negligence, either in the stowage of the anchor or in pltf. putting himself in the place where he was, so as to lead or contribute to the mischief; in which case pltf. could not recover.

I think that where the negligence of the party injured did not in any degree contribute to the immediate cause of the accident, such negligence ought to be set up as an answer to the action (POLLOCK, C.B.).—GREENLAND v. CHAPLIN (1850), 5 Exch. 243; 19 L. Gas escaped, from the pipe laid down under the contract, into pltf.'s shop. The servant of a gasfitter employed by pltf. happened to be at work in another room at the time of the escape, & went into the shop upon hearing of it, with a view of finding out its cause. He was carrying a lighted candle in his hand, & immediately on entering the shop an explosion took place, doing damage to pltf.'s premises & stock. On the trial of an action against defts. to recover for the injury sustained, the jury found, (a) that the escape of gas was occasioned by a defect in the pipe, & that that defect existed in the pipe when supplied, &, (b) that there was negligence on the part of the gasfitter's servant in carrying a lighted candle. Upon these findings:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover, & defts. were not relieved from responsibility by the negligent act of the gasfitter's servant.

If a man sustain an injury from the separate negligence of two persons employed on his premises to do two separate things . . . he can, in my opinion, maintain an action against both or either of the wrongdoers (KELLY, C.B.).—BURROWS v. MARCH GAS CO. 128. ——.] — The effect of Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 20, is to vest an absolute discretion in the constable, relieving officer, or overseer with regard to the duty imposed upon him by that sect. Deft. was a medical man, & had attended the pltf.'s family for many years as medical man. In 1888, pltf. had an illness which seemed to have affected his brain. In the summer of 1889, pltf. was confined in a lunatic asylum for eleven weeks. In the autumn of 1890 pltf.'s conduct again became peculiar, & on Nov. 1 his wife applied to the relieving officer for his intervention under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 20. The relieving officer declined to interfere without a note from a doctor as to pltf.'s state of mind. The wife thereupon applied to deft., & from what she told him & from his previous knowledge of the history of the case, he wrote the following: "I hereby certify that Mr. Thompson, i.e., pltf., is a person of unsound mind, & is dangerous to those about him." The relieving officer then took pltf. to an infirmary where he was confined for two days, & then brought before a magistrate & discharged as being sane. Pltf. brought this action against deft. for negligence in giving the above certificate:—Held: deft. was not liable.

To establish his case pltf. must prove negligence in deft., & that the negligence was the cause of his being taken to the infirmary. . . . A man cannot be sued for negligence unless there is a duty imposed upon him to take care. In this case, the wife, & daughter, & son of pltf. were frightened about pltf.'s conduct. The wife went to the relieving officer. The relieving officer desired to have the opinion of the medical man, & the wife went to deft. & obtained what was called a certificate. It was in reality merely the written opinion of deft. The wife did not go to deft. to get advice & treatment for pltf. She only went to get his opinion for the relieving officer. Therefore, there was no duty imposed upon deft. towards pltf. as a patient to exercise ordinary care & skill, & there was no other duty imposed upon him beyond that imposed upon any other person. There was therefore, no negligence. By sect. 20 the sole responsibility was upon the relieving officer, & he had to act upon his own responsibility. So the opinion of deft. was not the cause of pltf.'s being taken to the infirmary. The confinement was not the direct result of deft.'s act, but it was the direct result & the sole result of the act of the relieving officer; therefore judgment ought to have been entered for deft. 149 i. Injury not capable of being foreseen or anticipated.]—Deft. who was engaged in placing steam fitting in the basement of a school which, to his knowledge, was used by the children to play in, left a detached section of a steam heater on the floor. The section being in the way of the children the caretaker of the school removed it & placed it in an almost perpendicular position against the wall. The section fell upon a child who was injured:—Held: deft. was not negligent since he could not have been expected to take precautions to prevent an accident

150. —— Liability only where negligence established.]—Workmen employed by defts., a railway co., after cutting the grass & trimming the hedges bordering the railway, placed the trimmings in heaps between the hedge & the line, & allowed them to remain there fourteen days during very hot weather, which had continued for some weeks. A fire broke out between the hedge & the rails, & burnt some of the heaps of trimmings & the hedge, & spread to a stubble field beyond, & was thence carried by a high wind across the stubble field & over a road, & burnt pltf.'s cottage, which was situated about two hundred yards from the place where the fire broke out. There was evidence that an engine belonging to defts. had passed the spot shortly before the fire was first seen, but no evidence that the engine had emitted any sparks, nor any further evidence that the fire had originated from the engine, nor was there any evidence that the fire began in the heaps of trimmings & not on the parched ground around them:—Held: (1) it being a matter of common knowledge that engines do emit sparks, there was evidence for the jury that the fire originated in sparks from the engine that had just passed; (2) there was evidence for the jury that defts. were negligent, in leaving the dry trimmings, & the trimmings either originated or increased the fire, & caused it to spread to the stubble field; (3) if defts. were negligent they were responsible for the injury that resulted from their conduct to pltf., although they could not have reasonably anticipated that such injury would be caused by it.

Where there is no direct evidence of negligence, the question what a reasonable man might foresee is of importance in considering the question whether there is evidence for the jury of negligence or not, & this is what was meant by BRAMWELL, B., in his judgment in Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., No. 1. ante, . . . but when it has been once determined that there is evidence of negligence, the person guilty of it is equally liable for its consequences, whether he could have foreseen them or not (CHANNELL, B.).—SMITH v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 160. —— ——.]—A house-van attached to a steam plough was left for the night on the grassy side of a highway by deft. The van & plough were four or five feet from the metalled part of the way. During the evening pltfs.' testator drove his mare in a cart along the metalled road. The mare was a kicker, but he was unaware of her vice. Passing the van she shied at it, kicked, & galloped kicking for one hundred & forty yards, then got her leg over the shaft, fell, & kicked her driver as he rolled out of the cart. He afterwards died from the kick so received. In an action under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), by his exors. for wrongful & negligent obstruction of the highway, the jury found that the van was left where it stood unreasonably, & negligently, & caused some appreciable danger to vehicles passing along the metalled parts of the road; that the death was occasioned by the van standing where it did, & by the inherent vice of the mare combined, & that there was no contributory negligence:—Held: on these findings the verdict & judgment must be for pltfs.; for the unauthorised, unreasonable, & dangerous user of the highway by deft. was the proximate cause of the injury.—HARRIS v. MOBBS (1878), 3 Ex. She was in consequence driven against a pier, where she again negligently abstained for a considerable time from taking the assistance of a tug, which was offered to her. Having ultimately taken such assistance, she was towed in the only direction then possible, when, coming into a heavy seaway & the full force of a strong gale, the towing hawser parted, & she was driven ashore, doing damage to pltfs.' property. There was no negligence on the part of the ship after she took the assistance of the tug. 166. ——.]—Defts.' servants shunted some trucks & a brake van, all coupled together, on to a siding which was on an incline running down to a level crossing over a highway. The siding had a catch point to prevent vehicles, if set loose, from running down the incline; but, for the convenience of their shunting operations, defts.' servants did not place the trucks & van beyond the catch point, but screwed down their brakes, & left them in a position in which they would not have caused any damage if not interfered with. Some boys, trespassing on the siding, uncoupled the van from the trucks & released its brake, so that it ran down the incline & injured pltf., who was lawfully passing along the highway over the level crossing. Defts. were aware that boys were in the habit of trespassing on the siding & meddling with vehicles placed upon it.

At the trial of an action by pltf., the jury found that the van was in a safe position as & where left by defts., unless interfered with afterwards; that the accident would not have happened if the van had not been interfered with; that the interference was the act of trespassers, who acted negligently; that the danger of interference causing injury was known to & could have been guarded against by the exercise of reasonable care on the part of defts.; & that the negligence of defts. in not placing the van beyond the catch point was the effective cause of the accident:—Held: the evidence did not support the findings of negligence on the part of defts.; &, therefore applying the rule in Engelhart v. Farrant, No. 121, ante, as negligence on their part was not the effective cause of the accident, they were not rendered liable through the interference of trespassers.—MCDOWALL v. GREAT WESTERN RY. The outside broker had for some months been employed by the editor to advise him on matters connected with the financial correspondence in defts.' newspaper, & there was no evidence that the editor had any reason to suspect his honesty. He averred fault against the owners for having on their premises a door of this dangerous construction; & he averred fault against the corpn. in failing to remove this dangerous obstruction to the street, which he alleged they had power to do under Roads & Bridges (Scotland) Act, 1878 (c. 51), ss. 3, 94, 123, & a local Municipal Act:—Held: the pursuer had not stated a relevant case against the owners, because having a door opening outwards upon a street did not per se infer negligence on their part, nor against the corpn., for the door was not an obstruction to the highway within the local Municipal Act, which the corpn. had power to remove, & the pursuer had failed to aver that the street in question was a street to which the provisions of Roads & Bridges (Scotland) Act, 1878 (c. 51), applied.

On the ticket purchased by him there was a note to the effect that it was agreed between him & defts., who were the members of the committee of a Football Union, that defts. should not be liable for any injury caused to him through the overcrowding of the stand, or the conduct of the spectators; & a large number of red posters exhibiting a notice to that effect were placed in conspicuous positions inside the entrances to the ground. While the match was in progress there was a considerable amount of swaying to & fro of the people crowded on the stand, & pltf. was thereby carried over the place where a post forming part of the barrier had been snapped off leaving a hole, & his foot was caught in the hole & his leg injured. In an action claiming damages in respect of that injury, the jury found, (a) that pltf. knew that there was printed matter on the ticket purchased by him; (b) that pltf. did not know that the printing contained conditions upon which he was allowed to enter the ground; (c) that defts. did not do what was reasonably sufficient to give pltf. notice of the conditions; & (d) that the accident happened owing to the negligence of defts.:—Held: the questions whether defts. had taken reasonable care to give pltf. notice of the conditions of the contract, & whether there had been negligence on the part of defts., were entirely for the jury, & the ct. could not interfere with the verdict.—SKRINE v. GOULD (1912), 29 T. 208. Persons entering premises of owner or occupier—For purposes of business or common interest—On invitation express or implied.]—Upon the premises of deft., a sugar refiner, was a hole or shoot on a level with the floor, used for raising & lowering sugar to & from the different storeys of the building, & usual, necessary, & proper in the way of deft.'s business. Whilst in use, it was necessary & proper that this hole should be unfenced. When not in use, it was sometimes necessary, for the purpose of ventilation, that it should be open. It was not necessary that it should, when not in use, be unfenced; & it might at such times, without injury to the business, have been fenced by a rail. Whether or not it was usual to fence similar places when not in actual use, did not appear. Pltf., a journeyman gasfitter in the employ of a patentee who had fixed a patent gas regulator upon deft.'s premises, for which he was to be paid provided it effected a certain amount of saving in the consumption of gas, went upon the premises with his employer's agent for the purpose of examining the several burners, so as to test the new apparatus. Whilst thus engaged upon an upper floor of the building, pltf., under circumstances as to which the evidence was conflicting, but accidentally, &, as the jury found, without any fault or negligence on his part, fell through the hole, & was injured:—Held: inasmuch as pltf. was upon the premises on lawful business, in the course of fulfilling a contract in which he, or his employer & deft. both had an interest, & the hole or shoot was from its nature unreasonably dangerous to persons not usually employed upon the premises, but having a right to go there, deft.

was guilty of a breach of duty towards him in suffering the hole to be unfenced.

It was also argued that pltf. was at best in the condition of a bare licencee or guest who, it was urged, is only entitled to use the place as he finds it, & whose complaint may be said to wear the colour of ingratitude, so long as there is no design to injure him. The authorities respecting guests & other bare licencees & those respecting servants & others who consent to incur a risk, being therefore inapplicable, we are to consider what is the law as to the duty of the occupier of a building with reference to persons resorting thereto in the course of business, upon his invitation, express or implied. The common case is that of a customer in a shop; but it is obvious that this is only one of a class; for, whether the customer is actually chaffering at the time, or actually buys or not, he is, according to an undoubted course of authority & practice, entitled to the exercise of reasonable care by the occupier to prevent damage from unusual danger, of which the occupier knows or ought to know, such as a trap door left open, unfenced & unlighted. . . . This protection does not depend upon the fact of a contract being entered into in the way of the shopkeeper's business during the stay of the customer, but upon the fact that the customer has come into the shop in pursuance of a tacit invitation given by the shopkeeper, with a view to business which concerns himself. If a customer were, after buying goods, to go back to the shop in order to complain of the quality, or that the change was not right, he would be just as much there upon business which concerned the shopkeeper, & as much entitled to protection during this accessory visit, though it might not be for the shopkeeper's benefit, as during the principal visit, which was. If, instead of going himself, the customer were to send his servant, the servant would be entitled to the same consideration as the master. The class to which the customer belongs includes persons who go not as mere volunteers, or licencees, or guests, or servants or persons whose employment is such that danger may be considered as bargained for, but who go upon business which concerns the occupier, & upon his invitation express or implied (WILLES, J.).—INDERMAUR v. DAMES (1866), L. 210. —— —— ——.]—Defts., called the contractor, entered into a contract with the London County Council to remodel & enlarge a school building for a lump sum in accordance with the specification in the schedule thereto. This sum included certain sums for special work, e.g., a sum for providing & fixing hot water heating apparatus, & the County Council reserved to themselves the right to nominate special tradesmen to execute this work, in which case the fixed sum for the work was to be deducted from the contract price & to be paid direct by the County Council to the tradesmen executing the work. By a clause in the contract all specialists, merchants, tradesmen, & others executing any work or supplying any goods for the purposes of the contract who might at any time be nominated or approved by the County Council were thereby declared to be sub-contractors employed by the contractor. By a clause in the specification the contractor is to afford facilities to any other tradesmen employed by the Council in the building, & to include the reasonable use of any scaffolding already erected for his own purposes, so that their work may proceed during the progress of his contract. The County Council, under the option reserved to them, contracted with a firm of hot water engineers to provide & fix the hot water heating apparatus in the building. Defts., in order to provide a gangway for their workmen over an opening in an upper floor of the building, laid down two planks side by side across the opening. The planks were not fastened down in any way. Pltf., a workman in the employment of the hot water engineers, in the course of his work was passing over the gangway when, apparently by reason of the boards slipping, he fell down the opening & was injured. In an action against defts. to recover damages for the injuries caused, as alleged, by their negligence :—Held : pltf. was in the position of a person invited by defts. to use the gangway for the purposes of his work, & that the duty of defts. to the pltf. was that of invitors & not that of mere licensors.

It is essential to pltf.'s case that he should bring himself into the position of an invitee & he can only do that by satisfying the ct. that by reason of the contract between defts. & the County Council defts. had a common interest with his employers in the completion of the work comprised in the contract & that therefore he, as a workman employed on the work by Messrs. Watkin [sub-contractors] was using the gangway as an invitee of defts. (BANKES, L.J.).—ELLIOTT v. ROBERTS (C. P.) & CO., LTD., [1916] 2 K. B. 518 ; 85 L. J. K. B. 1689 ; 115 L. T. 255 ; 81 J. I do not think that if a man is permitted or invited go to a quayside to do business by the ship's rail or in the ship itself that amounts to an invitation to any other part of the dock premises.

I think it is not an invitation to go into a warehouse where in the ordinary course the business of a tallyman is not conducted. While attending a rehearsal she was told by an employee of defts., whose orders she was not bound to obey, to stand on a staircase forming part of the stage scenery, which by his negligence was insecurely fastened; & on her doing so the staircase collapsed, & she was injured. In an action by pltf. against these defts. for damages for personal injuries:—Held: as the rehearsal was not a matter of exclusive interest to defts., but of common interest to pltf. & defts., pltf., by taking part in it, could not be regarded as a volunteer gratuitously assisting the servant of defts. in doing their work so as to entitle defts. to rely upon the defence of common employment, but that pltf. was on the premises of defts. as a licencee having a common interest with them, or as an invitee, to whom defts. accordingly owed a duty of using reasonable care to prevent damage to pltf. from unusual dangers or traps of which they knew or ought to have known, & therefore, defts. having failed in the observance of that duty, pltf. was entitled to recover against them in the action.—HAYWARD v. DRURY LANE THEATRE, LTD. & MOSS' EMPIRES, LTD., [1917] 2 K. 219. —— —— —— ——.]—At defts.' station at C. it was the habit to unload coal waggons by shunting them & tipping the coal into cells; it was also the practice for the consignees of the coal, or their servants, to assist in the unloading, & for that purpose to go along a flagged path by the side of the waggons. Pltf. was consignee of a coal waggon, which could not be unloaded in the usual way on account of all the cells being occupied. With the permission of the station master he went to his waggon, which was shunted in the usual place, took some coal from the top of the waggon, & descended on to the flagged path. The flag he stepped on gave way, & he fell into one of the cells & was injured:—Held: although not getting his coal in the usual mode, pltf. was not a mere licencee, but was engaged, with the consent & invitation of defts., in a transaction of common interest to both parties, & was therefore entitled to require that defts.' premises should be in a reasonably secure condition.

I quite concur in the rule laid down by the cases, that where a person is a mere licencee he has no cause of action on account of dangers existing in the place he is permitted to enter. Now in one sense pltf. was a licencee, but he was not a mere licencee, & the word mere has a very qualifying operation. We must infer from the silence of the station master that he acquiesced in pltf.'s going on to the siding for the purpose of getting coal from his waggon in the way in which he did get it, & we are not to suppose that any additional risk was caused by his mode of descending from the buffer. Pltf., then, went there with the consent of the station master for the purpose of getting his coal, but in what relation did defts. stand to that purpose? In the delivery & receipt of the coal there was a common interest in them & in pltf., since they were bound to deliver it; & this prevents the case from being that of one who is a mere licencee (CHANNELL, B.).—HOLMES v. NORTH EASTERN RY. land unaccompanied by any older person & was shortly afterwards found upon a heap of paving stones, one of which had fallen upon her hand & injured it. There was no evidence to show how the accident happened. In an action for negligence the jury found that children played upon the land with the knowledge & permission of defts.; that there was no invitation to pltf. to use the land unaccompanied; that defts. ought to have known that there was a likelihood of children being injured by the stones; & that defts. did not take reasonable care to prevent children being injured thereby: —Held: (1) there being neither allurement nor trap, nor invitation, nor dangerous object placed upon the land, defts. were not liable.

Now the law as to mere licencees is well settled. The grant of the licence to go on the land creates no right, but merely affords an answer to a charge of trespass. It is a mere permission, & those who take it must take it with all chances of meeting with accidents. There are, however, the following exceptions to the freedom from liability, namely, (a) Allurement in the evil sense of alluring with malicious intent to injure. This gives a right of action even to a trespasser, & a fortiori therefore to a licencee. (b) Concealed trap—that is, something added to the condition of the ground as it was when the licence was given in a way likely to be dangerous & without giving notice to the licencee. (c) The last exception is the introduction into the land to which the licence applies of something out of the normal user of the land, known to the owners to be dangerous, without warning the licencee (FARWELL, L.J.).

In order to get to the departure platform of the defts.' railway, it was necessary to cross a bridge approached by steep steps & turning to the right at the top of the steps. About 6 or 10 feet from the top step a servant of the defts., for the purpose of cleaning a lamp, was standing on a narrow plank placed across the bridge resting on the balustrades about 4 feet 6 inches from the ground. Pltf. walked against the plank & was injured. It was daylight at the time of the accident. In an action against defts. for personal injuries:—Held: (1) There was no reasonable evidence of negligence on the part of defts. to go to the jury; (2) pltf. was not a bare licencee, but was on defts.' premises by the invitation of defts. to the same extent as the passenger accompanied, who was there on lawful business in which the passenger & the co. had both an interest.—WATKINS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. According to the practice of defts. the gate was kept locked when trains were passing, & was unlocked only when it was safe to cross the line, & that practice was known to pltf. On the occasion in question, owing to the negligence of a servant of defts., the gate was left unlocked when a train was approaching, & pltf. went through it, & proceeded to cross the line when he was knocked down by the train & injured. In going so pltf. had to go through a dark passage, in which there were some steps, down which she fell. Deft. as owner of the premises, acknowledged the liability, if any, to pay damages to pltf. for the injuries she had suffered in so falling down the steps:—Held: there was sufficient evidence of negligence as to the passage having been insufficiently lighted for the case to go to the jury.—v. JENKINSON (1884), 1 T. He had arranged for the performance of a play in his theatre with the manager of a touring theatrical co., who was to provide actors & scenery, deft. providing the theatre, the lighting & the playbills; each took an agreed proportion of the receipts. Pltf. took & occupied a seat in the theatre; during the performance an actor fired a pistol, which should have contained only a blank cartridge, but in the barrel of which, by some unexplained mischance, there was also a second cartridge of smaller size, which, when the pistol was fired struck pltf. on the wrist & inflicted a serious wound. The county ct. judge held that it was an implied term of the contract between pltf. & deft. that all persons connected with the performance of the play should exercise reasonable care so that members of the audience should not be exposed to any danger which could be avoided by the exercise of such reasonable care:—Held: the implied warranty found by the county ct. judge was too wide, the true relation between pltf. & deft. was that of invitor & invitee, deft. owed pltf. a duty to use reasonable care that she was not exposed to unusual danger, the existence of which deft. either knew or ought to have known, & that there must be a new trial to inquire into the supervision exercised over the firearms & the ammunition for them & into the loading of the pistols.—COX v. COULSON, [1916] 2 K. The person who was in charge of the contrivance, but who was not a servant of defts., improperly invited pltf. to sit on it in a wrong position, & pltf. was injured through being thrown off the contrivance. In an action for damages for negligence:—Held: the position of defts. & pltf. was that of invitors & invitee & as there was no evidence that the performance was intrinsically dangerous & no evidence of any negligence by defts. or by any servant of theirs pltf. could not recover.—SHEEHAN v. DREAMLAND, MARGATE, LTD. The cornice was defective, but deft. was not aware of the defect; & no evidence was given on behalf of pltf. to show that deft. neglected proper precautions, whereby she failed to notice the condition of the cornice:—Held: deft.'s duty was to keep her house in such a state of repair as not to expose pltf., an invitee, to any hidden danger of which she was aware or ought to have been aware, & as she was in fact not aware of such danger, & there was no evidence to show negligence, whereby she failed to be aware of it, pltf.'s claim failed.—PRITCHARD v. PETO, [1917] 2 K. 246. Builder's foreman removing firm's advertisement board—After work completed.]—The owners of a flat let it on a lease to a tenant & agreed to contribute to the cost of decorating & repairing it at the commencement of the term. The tenant employed a firm of builders to do the work. The firm's advertisement board was fixed to a balcony with a balustrade projecting from the front wall of the flat. The judge at the trial found that the balcony was not parcel of the demised premises but was part of the exterior of the premises which the lessors were bound to repair. The jury found that the balcony was dangerous & that the lessors knew or ought to have known this. When the work was finished the firm's foreman went on the balcony to remove the advertisement board. The balustrade gave way & the man fell into the street below & was killed.

In an action by his widow under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), against the lessors of the flat :—Held : pltf. was entitled to recover, for that the deceased man was more than a bare licencee of defts. & was at least a licencee with an interest, with the same rights as an invitee, & that there was evidence to support the finding of the jury that defts. ought to have known the balcony was dangerous.—SUTCLIFFE v. CLIENTS INVESTMENT CO., [1924] 2 K. Duty to exercise reasonable care—To prevent damage from unusual danger.]—There is no implied contract between the owners of a ship & a pilot whom they are compelled to employ, that the pilot shall take upon himself the risk of injury from the negligence of the shipowners' servants ; & an action will lie by the pilot against the shipowners for injuries, caused to him, whilst acting as pilot on board their vessel, by the negligence of their servants.

This was an action under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846, to recover damages in respect of the death of pltf.'s testator, who was her husband. . . . There is an obligation on the part of the occupier of property, whether fixed or movable, to those who, at his invitation, express or implied, come on that property, to take, by himself & servants, reasonable care that the person so coming shall not be exposed to unusual danger (BLACKBURN, J.).—SMITH v. STEELE (1875), L. Defts. had voluntarily constructed close to the station & to the level crossing & parallel to the latter a footbridge, with staircases. The bridge stood entirely on deft.'s land, & had been maintained by them, but the footway over it at each end communicated directly with the highway, & only indirectly by means of the highway with defts.' station premises. Defts. had never closed the footway or taken any steps to prevent the public from using it, & the public in fact used it without hinderance. On Jan. 22, 1915, between 1 & 2 p.m., pltf. was crossing over the bridge from north to south with a view to catching a train at the south platform of defts.' station. On the morning of that day there had been a blizzard, & snow had fallen on the footway of the bridge, which in consequence of the traffic had become caked on the steps, rendering them slippery. Fifteen minutes later pltf., in the course of his work, had to descend a ladder leading into the hold. It came adrift, & pltf. fell, sustaining injuries for which he sued deft.:—Held: deft. was liable to pltf., since it was his duty under the circumstances to make some inspection of the vessel before allowing the stevedore & his men to go on board her, & since the slightest inspection would have revealed the defective state of the ladder.

A man who intends that others shall come upon property of which he is the occupier for purposes of work or business in which he is interested, owes a duty to those who do so come to use reasonable care to see that the property & the applicances upon it which it is intended shall be used in the work are fit for the purpose to which they are to be put, & he does not discharge this duty by merely contracting with competent people to do the work for him (BIGHAM, J.).—MARNEY v. SCOTT. 258. Duty only in relation to invitees or licencees.]—Workmen employed by defts., a gas co., for the purpose of carrying out repairs to a gas main in a highway placed a fire pail, on which was a ladle containing molten lead, on unenclosed land adjacent to the highway. Pltf., a young child, was playing with other children near the fire when a passer by accidentally knocked over the fire pail, & the molten lead was spilled on pltf., causing her injury. In an action by pltf. to recover damages the county ct. judge found that defts. were guilty of negligence in leaving the fire unattended & unguarded with the knowledge that it was surrounded by children & that it was being used for molten lead:—Held: there was evidence on which the county ct. judge could find that defts. were negligent; & defts. were also liable on the ground that what they were doing was a nuisance in that it was dangerous unless precautions were taken to guard persons using the highway from the danger.

271. Limitation by notice to invitee.]—Defts. were a corpn. constituted for the purpose of the upper navigation of the river Thames by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 89, & under the powers of 29 & 30 Vict. c. 89, & of the previous statutes relating to the navigation which had become vested in them, defts. had constructed bridges & other works, & had acquired the right to use the whole of the towing paths along the river, & to take toll for the same. In the exercise of such right, defts. took an aggregate toll in one sum for the use of the entire navigation, & towing paths, which included the works defts. had constructed, as well as the natural soil which had been worn into the track of a towing path. Part of such natural towing path got into a dangerous state by the action of the water, & in consequence thereof pltf.'s horses whilst using it in towing a barge, for which the proper toll had been paid to defts., fell into the river & were drowned:—Held: as defts. took one toll for the use of the entire towing path, parts of which were artificial, it mattered not that the place where the accident happened was not artificial, but it was the duty of defts. to take reasonable care that the whole of the towing path was in such a state as not to expose those using it to undue danger, & for a neglect of such duty defts. were responsible to pltf. although they were a public body receiving their powers for public purposes.

Semble: defts. would not be liable for the defective state of the towing paths, if such state were a latent one, of the existence of which defts. might be ignorant though using reasonable care, or if they were to give notice of it to those who pay the tolls, or to inform them that they must take the towing paths as they find them.—WINCH v. THAMES CONSERVATORS (1874), L. 273. Duty as to safe condition & fitness for purpose—Defective crane.]—Pltf. sued under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), as widow of K. Semble: without these amendments the declaration was good.

Defts. contracted as common carriers to carry stone for the master of the deceased, & to deliver the stone, & as further part & as means of such delivery, the stone was to be unloaded by means of a crane, which they were to provide for reward. They were thus bound to provide a crane for the use of the consignees, & therefore for the servants of the consignees. . . . In consequence of the defect in the truck injury was occasioned to pltf., one of the buyers' servants, who was employed in unloading the coals, & had got into the truck for that purpose:—Held: there was a duty on the part of deft. towards pltf. to exercise reasonable care with regard to the condition of the truck, & deft. was therefore liable to pltf. in respect of the injuries sustained by him.—ELLIOTT v. HALL (1885), 15 Q. A chain so supplied was defective & broke, & caused injuries to one of pltf.'s workmen, who sued them under the Employer's Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42). Pltfs. settled this action for £125, a sum which it was not suggested was an unreasonable one, & then sought to recover the amount so paid from deft. It was admitted by deft. on the one hand that there had been a breach by him of an implied warranty that the chain should be reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was supplied, & by pltfs. on the other hand that they might, by the exercise of reasonable care, have discovered the defect in the chain :—Held : the damages sought to be recovered were not too remote, inasmuch as the injuries to the workman were the natural consequence of deft.'s breach of warranty, upon which pltfs. were entitled to rely.—MOWBRAY v. MERRYWEATHER, [1895] 2 Q. By the charterparty defts. warranted that the vessel was in every way fitted for the voyage & service, & to be so maintained by the owners. During the currency of the charterparty a stevedore engaged on the ship in the work of unloading sustained injuries by reason of the defective condition of an iron ladder leading to the hold. The stevedore sued the charterer for damages. The charterer defended the action, & in so doing acted reasonably, & judgment was given against him for damages & costs on the ground that he had committed a breach of duty towards the stevedore in not making an inspection of the vessel before inviting the stevedore on board :—Held : the charterer's liability to the stevedore was the natural consequence of defts.' breach of warranty ; & the charterer was entitled to recover from defts. the damages & costs paid by him to the stevedore, & his own costs, as between solr. & client, incurred in defending the action.—SCOTT v. FOLEY, AIKMAN & Co. The workman having brought an action in the county ct. against the stevedore for compensation under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), the judge withdrew the case from the jury on the ground that the stevedore was not responsible for a defect in the ship's tackle, & his decision was affirmed by the Div. notice. It then averred that W. T. had by the leave & licence of defts., ascended out of a boat upon the barge, & was then intending to pass to the landing place, it being then night time & dark. Breach: that although the planks had been removed, defts. gave W. T. no notice of such removal, in consequence of which & by reason of the negligence of defts., & without any default on his part, W. T. fell into the river & was drowned. Special damage in that pltfs. were obliged to pay the amount of the policy much earlier than they otherwise would, during which time they would have received the premiums from W. T.:—Held: the declaration disclosed no duty on the part of defts. to keep the planks & gangways between the dumb barge & the landing place for the use of any persons but those who were going by the railway; & as it did not appear that W. 283. Children frequenting premises adjacent to railway—Without protest from company—Licence not extending to railway.]—Pltf., a child two & a half years old, lived with his parents in one of a row of houses in front of which was a highway. On the other side of the highway there was a fence of posts & rails belonging to & repairable by a railway co. Inside the fence, on the co.'s premises, there was a siding, a pile of wooden railway sleepers distant two & a half inches from the fence, &, beyond them & about thirty five yards in a direct line from pltf.'s parents' house, the main line of the co.'s railway. Pltf. got or was assisted over or through the fence & when on the main line was run over by an express train of the co., sustaining serious injury. In an action against the co. for damages the jury found that pltf. got on to the line over or through the fence; that the co.'s servants knew that children were in the habit of playing on the pile of sleepers, but not that they were in the habit of getting on the main line, & that the evidence did not bring home knowledge to any particular servant, but that there must have been knowledge on the part of some of the co.'s servants; that the fence was not a reasonably fit fence for the purpose of separating the railway from the high road, having regard to the proximity of the houses on the other side of it; that children were in the habit of getting on to the pile of sleepers over or through the fence by the leave or licence of the co., but not elsewhere & that defts., having regard to all the circumstances, were guilty of negligence in not taking some sufficient means of preventing children from getting on to the line:—Held: the leave & licence, if any, to play on the pile of sleepers was confined to that spot, & did not extend to the main line; there was no duty on the co. to fence off the sleepers from the rest of their land & they were not liable.—JENKINS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. Licencee must take with concomitant conditions & perils.]—No right is alleged: it is merely stated that the owners allowed all persons who chose to do so, for recreation or for business, to go upon the waste without complaint, that they were not churlish enough to interfere with any person who went there. One who thus uses the waste has no right to complain of an excavation he finds there. He must take the permission with its concomitant conditions, &, it may be, perils. . . . All that can be said in this case is, that pltf. had a tacit permission to cross the waste. 292. ———.]—Where a party is expressly or impliedly allowed to go through premises, such party takes the risk of any dangers arising from the natural & ordinary state in which the premises are at the time, or from the business generally carried on there; but he does not take the risk arising from any act of positive negligence on the part of such owner or his servants, & the latter are under a duty to protect the licencee against any such extraordinary dangers.

The grantee must use the permission as the thing exists. It is a different question, however, where negligence on the part of the person granting the permission is superadded. 302. —— Unusual danger—Knowledge of grantor.]—Pltf., who was carrying a Pomeranian dog, went with her husband into a teashop belonging to defts. for the purpose of having tea. She put the dog on the floor, keeping hold of its lead. A cat, who was rearing kittens at the time, came out of the storeroom, & sprang on the dog & bit him. Pltf. picked up the dog with the cat on its back & gave it to her husband. They then prepared to leave the shop when the cat sprang on pltf.'s shoulder & bit her arm. Pltf. brought an action against defts. claiming damages for the personal injuries sustained by her & also for the injury done to her dog. The jury found that pltf. took her dog on the premises by permission of defts., or with their acquiescence; that the cat, to the knowledge of defts., had while rearing kittens a disposition to attack a dog in her neighbourhood, & a person holding a dog; that the cat attacked the dog unprovoked; that pltf.'s injuries were the result of the cat attacking the dog; & that defts. did not in the circumstances take reasonable precautions of the safety of their customers. They assessed the damages at £100, & the learned judge entered judgment for that amount. Defts. appealed. It was contended on behalf of pltf. that defts. were liable on the grounds that they had been guilty of (a) a breach of duty as possessors of a cat known to be vicious, & (b) a breach of the duty which they owed to pltf. as a customer whom they had invited into their shop:—Held: (1) there was no evidence to support the finding of the jury that a cat rearing kittens had a disposition to attack a person holding a dog, or their finding that defts. knew of the danger.

(2) Pltf. being on the premises with her dog by the permission but not by the invitation of defts., they would only be liable for damages caused by an unusual danger of which they knew or ought to have known, & that, there being no evidence that defts. knew of the danger, & the risk being so remote that they could not reasonably have anticipated it, they were not liable to pltf. for the injury done either to herself or her dog.—CLINTON v. LYONS (J.) & CO., LTD., [1912] 3 K. A flight of steps, protected on either side by railings, led up to the front door. One of these railings had been for some time displaced, leaving a gap of eighteen inches between the rails on either side of it. Across this gap rope had been interlaced, but had worn away & had not been renewed. The sister had frequently been to the house, & had shortly before noticed that the rail was missing. On the day in question the sister went up the steps, but pltf. in following fell through the gap & was injured:—Held: pltf. could maintain no action against deft. for the injury he had sustained, as the only duty on the part of deft. towards him was to take care that there was no concealed danger, & of this there was no evidence.

A train coming in whilst the servants of a coal merchant were shooting coals into the cellar for S., pltf., a passenger, whilst passing as the jury found in the usual way out of the station, without any fault of his own, fell into the cellar opening, which the coal merchant's servants had negligently left insufficiently guarded :—Held : S., the occupier of the refreshment rooms & cellar, was responsible for this negligence. Semble : the railway co. also would be liable, but not the coal merchant.

No sound distinction in this respect can be drawn between the case of a public highway & a road which may be & to the knowledge of the wrongdoer probably will in fact be used by persons lawfully entitled so to do. In answer to an action by the boy against the corpn. for damages for injuries sustained through the defective condition of the fountain, defts. denied negligence, & alleged that the accident was due to the fountain being used for an improper purpose which they could not have anticipated. There being a conflict of evidence as to the condition of the fountain, the jury awarded pltf. £21 damages, & judgment was entered accordingly. It appeared that deft. had agreed with the owner of the premises, two carcasses of houses, to finish one of them, for doing which he was to have the other ; & that workmen employed by him were then actually at work upon them ; but it did not appear that any conveyance had been made to him. The street in question, which had been formed for six years, & led from a public street to a new road across fields, over which the way had been publicly used for five or six years, was unfinished, one half only being lighted, the other neither lighted nor paved ; but the inhabitants had paid the highway & paving rates :—Held : this was sufficient evidence to go to a jury of a possession in deft., & of a dedication of the street to the public.

When the public are thus invited to go along a street, if, through the carelessness & negligence of the proprietors or occupiers of houses therein, an accident happens to an individual passing, the parties cannot afterwards turn round & say, that it was not a public road (BEST, C.J.).—JARVIS v.

322. —— ——.]—Defts., a local authority, who were carrying out road improvements, employed contractors to pull down a wall at the end of a cul de sac & to make a new road joining the old cul de sac to an existing highway. The contractors pulled down the wall & made up a section of the new road as a contractor's road & then closed further progress by erecting a wooden fence, but there was no night watchman or lamp to give warning of the obstruction. Between the fence & the existing highway with which the cul de sac was to be connected there was a dangerous ravine, but the lights on each side of that highway were clearly visible to any one entering the cul de sac & might induce a stranger to suppose that there was a continuous road. Pltf., who was driving a motor car at night, proceeded along the cul de sac & the contractor's road, &, not seeing the fence, crashed through it into the ravine & was seriously injured. In an action for negligence:—Held: although the place of the accident was not a highway but a private site, yet, as there was an invitation to go upon it, defts. were liable for the consequences of putting an unexpected obstruction in the path of the invitee, & pltf. was entitled to recover.—OLDHAM v. SHEFFIELD CORPN. 323. Danger to persons using level crossing — Projecting rails.]—Pltf., having to pass by a footway over a part of which defts. had obtained statutory powers to place their lines, was injured by falling over the rails. Defts. had allowed the rails to project some inches above the ballast. Pltf. having recovered damages in the county ct., defts. appealed, on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on their part:—Held: as it had been the duty of defts. to have maintained the footway at the point at which they had placed their lines upon it in as safe a condition for the public using it as it had previously been, pltf. was entitled to recover in the action.—ENNEW v. GREAT EASTERN RY. 328. Water drained from house — Damage caused by negligence of employee—Obstruction of pipe from sink.]—Pltf. occupied the ground floor & deft. the third & fourth floors of the same building. Deft.'s employés, without his knowledge, were in the habit of emptying tea leaves into a sink leading from his premises to a pipe, & in consequence the pipe was choked, & an overflow of water ensued. The water came through the ceiling of pltf.'s rooms & did damage to certain goods which he had there. In an action against deft. for the damage sustained:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover, as a duty was cast upon deft. to prevent an overflow, which duty he had failed to discharge.—ABELSON v. BROCKMAN (1889), 54 J. 329. Nor will there be sufficient evidence that a storm was so extraordinary as to excuse the parties responsible for the sewers, unless the evidence extends over a considerable range of years, during which the sewers in question have been in existence. 330. —— Canal company.] — A right of action against a canal co. for negligently keeping their sluices, by reason whereof the canal overflowed, not ousted by provisions in the Canal Act for compensation to parties affected by the works, & especially by the overflowing of the water over the sluices, etc.; those provisions relating to the due & proper management of the works, not to their negligent management.—COCKBURN v. EREWASH CANAL CO. (1862), 11 W. R. 34.

331. —— ——.]—Defts.' canal was constructed under an Act of Parliament, by which the canal was to be open for use by the public on payment of tolls. Defts. were authorised to take land compulsorily & construct the canal, doing as little damage as might be, & to do all things necessary for making & preserving & using the canal, making satisfaction for all damages to be sustained by the owners of lands & hereditaments taken or prejudiced by the execution of the powers of the Act. Comrs. were appointed who were to determine from time to time what sum should be paid for the purchase of lands, & also to determine what other distinct sum should be paid by defts. as recompense for any damages which might be at any time whatsoever sustained by owners of lands or hereditaments by reason of the making or maintaining the canal. The minerals under the canal were expressly reserved to the owners, who were to be at liberty, subject to the provisions of the Act, to work the minerals; provided that no injury be done to the navigation. By another clause, the owners were not to work the minerals without giving three months' notice to defts., who might inspect the mines, & might, if they thought proper, prevent the working of the mines, paying to the owners the value; on failure of defts. to inspect the mines, the owners were authorised to work them. The canal having been constructed & used for many years, pltf., who was owner of coal mines under the canal, gave defts. proper notice of his intention to work them; defts. did not inspect, & refused to purchase. Pltf. proceeded to work the mines, without regard to the surface, & without attempting to support it, & knowing that the effect would be to let down the surface, & probably disturb the strata, & that there was danger of the water escaping from the canal into the mines; but, except as above, pltf. did not work his mines in any negligent or unskilful or improper manner, but got the coal in the manner in which that vein of coal is ordinarily gotten, & without doing so he could not have obtained the full benefit of his coal. The canal was in good order when pltf. commenced working his coal; & defts. did all they could to keep the canal watertight, by puddling, etc. During part of the time, while pltf.'s working was going on, they had dammed back the water, & so emptied the water out of that part of the canal; but they refused to do so for the three months necessary for pltf. to work out his coal. Defts. were guilty of no actual carelessness in the management of their canal, unless it was carelessness to allow the water to be in it while the mines were worked. The result of the working was that the strata became dislocated, & the water of the canal escaped through the cracks & flooded the workings, & pltf. was obliged to abandon his coal. Pltf. thereupon brought an action, charging that defts., having brought water into the canal, so carelessly & improperly managed the canal & the water, that the water escaped & flooded pltf.'s mine:—Held: an action of tort could not be maintained.—DUNN v. BIRMINGHAM CANAL CO. In consequence of the working of a coal mine the canal & mill had subsided, & water leaked from the canal into the mill. 334. —— —— ——.]—Fire Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78), s. 86, which enacts that no action shall be maintained against any person in whose house, or on whose estate, any fire shall accidentally begin, is not confined in its operation to those districts to which the limited clauses of the Act are restricted. It does not apply where a fire is produced by negligence: &, in that case, by the common law, an action lies against the party by whose negligence or that of his servants, a fire arises on his premises & damages the property of another. It does not apply where the fire is lighted intentionally, & mischief happens to result. —FILLITER v. PHIPPARD (1847), 11 Q. B. 347; 17 L. J. Q. B. 89; 10 L. T. O. S. 225; 11 J. 337. —— Application of Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78), s. 86.]—The only doubt that can be raised as to its [above Act] being of a local & personal character, is, that it is not of a local & personal character only: some of the clauses affecting all the Queen's subjects, as the 84th & 86th, relating to accidental fires; & the statute is, in that respect, public. If the defence in an action arose out of either of those clauses, it would probably be held that the statutable plea was not taken away. But the defence in this case arises under that part of the Act which is not public; in all other respects then, so far as it relates to accidental fires, the Act falls under the category of a statute of a local & personal nature; & we therefore all agree, that the statutable plea of the general issue, whereby to give the special matter in evidence, was taken away in this case (PARKE, B.).—RICHARDS v. EASTO (1846), 3 Dow. & L. 515; 15 M. & W. 244; 15 L. 339. —— Effect of subsequent negligence—Failure to prevent spreading—Motor car.]—Pltf. occupied rooms over a garage. Part of the garage was let to deft., who kept a motor car there. Deft.'s servant, who had little skill as a chauffeur, having occasion in the course of his employment to move the motor car, started the engine, & from some unexplained cause, & without negligence on the part of the servant, the petrol in the carburettor caught fire. If the servant had promptly turned off the tap leading from the petrol tank to the carburettor, the fire would have harmlessly burnt itself out. But he failed to do this; & the fire spread & burnt the car, the garage, & pltf.'s rooms & furniture. Pltf. brought an action for damages. Deft. pleaded that the fire accidentally began within the meaning of the above enactment. The judge at the trial found that deft.'s servant was negligent in not promptly turning off the petrol tap:—Held: (1) Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78) did not protect a person who brought upon his premises an object likely to do damage if not kept in control, & a motor car ready to start, or such a car in charge of an unskilled chauffeur, was an object of that kind; (2) the fire which caused the damage was not that which took place in the carburettor, but was the fire which spread to the car; & this fire did not begin accidentally but was caused by the negligence of deft.'s servant.—MUSGROVE v. PANDELIS, [1919] 2 K. SUB-SECT. 2.—DANGEROUS ARTICLES.

A. In General.

353. Whether article dangerous—Question of law.]—Pltf. was injured by the explosion of a brazing lamp manufactured by defts. & by them supplied to a retail dealer from whom it was purchased by pltf.:—Held: the question of whether the lamp was an article dangerous in itself so as to impose a duty upon defts. in regard to it to a person to whom they supplied it or into whose hands it came was a question of law for the judge & not of fact for the jury. The manufacturer of a dangerous article, the nature of which he has disclosed or the danger of which is apparent on the face of it, is under no obligation to a third person who is injured owing to its imperfect manufacture.

If, therefore, a person dealing with an article of a dangerous nature which he knows to be dangerous hands it over to somebody else who is ignorant of its true nature without warning him, he commits a breach of duty not only to the person who contracts with him, but to all the persons who to his knowledge may use it. . . . Now comes this question: Assuming that the vendor of a chattel which does belong to the dangerous class delivers it with a proper warning to the recipient, does he

SUB-SECT. 1.—NEGLIGENT DRIVING.

A. Question for the Jury.

366. General rule.] — In case, for negligent driving, the law or usage of the road is not the criterion of the negligence. Therefore where deft.'s carriage was on the wrong side of the road, & in attempting to pass on the near instead of the off side, pltf. sustained damages:—Held: it was for the jury to decide the question of negligence, without regard to the law of the road.—WAYDE v. CARR (LADY) (1823), 3 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 255; sub nom. WAYTE v. CARR, 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 63.

367. ——.]—COLE v. FARLEY (1884), 1 T. L. R. 25.

368. ——.] — Looking at the judge's notes of the evidence, it would seem that he nonsuited on the ground of contributory negligence of pltf. himself rather than on the absence of evidence, of negligence on the part of the co.'s driver. But in either case, upon the evidence the question was one entirely for the jury. It was entirely a case for the jury whether the co.'s driver could better & more easily have avoided the collision than the other, & whether it had arisen from the fault of one or the other. There was not such clear & conclusive evidence of it as to justify the judge in a nonsuit (DENMAN, J.).—FINEGAN v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO. (1889), 53 J. P. 663; 5 T. L. R. 598.

369. ——.] — WARREN v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO. (1900), 64 J. P. Jo. 52.

370. ——.] — Pltf. stepped out into the road in front of a motor omnibus belonging to defts., whereupon the driver, to avoid running over pltf., steered to his offside, released the clutch, applied the brakes, & locked the back wheels, with the result that the omnibus skidded & in doing so struck pltf. & injured him. At the trial of an action brought by pltf. against defts. to recover damages, the judge left to the jury the question as to whether the driver was negligent, & the further question as to whether the defts. had placed a nuisance on the highway, the omnibus having skidded & being liable to skid & cause injury without any negligence on the part of the driver. The jury found that there had been no negligence on the part of the driver, & disagreed upon the question of nuisance:—Held: judgment should be entered for defts.; &, further, the question of nuisance ought not to have been left to the jury at all.—PARKER v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO., LTD. (1909), 101 L. T. 623; 74 J. P. 20; 26 T. L. R. 18; 53 Sol. Jo. 867; 7 L. G. R. 1111, C. A.

374. ——.]—The only question is whether there is evidence on which the jury might reasonably find for pltfs., & I think that, upon the facts, there is. The tram engine was coming down hill at a great speed, the ladies stopped & held up their hands; the tram engine came on, the pony as it came near him reared & swerved, & so the accident occurred. Could it be said that there was no evidence of negligence? I think there is. The facts in the case rather differ from Jolly v. North Staffordshire Tramway Co., No. 373, ante, & here there was evidence to sustain the verdict (MANISTY, J.).—DOWNING v. BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND TRAMS, DANDO v. SAME (1888), 5 T. 376. Horse too large for vehicle.]—Deft. was driving along the highway a 16-hands horse in a van which was far too small for such a horse, & in consequence the horse's houghs rubbed against the crossbar of the shafts of the van. Pltf.'s omnibus was standing at the kerb on its proper side. Deft.'s horse was startled by a slight collision with a cab, & afterwards violently collided with pltf.'s omnibus, producing damage. No accident would have happened to pltf.'s omnibus if deft.'s horse had not been too large for the van:—Held: the harnessing of the horse to such a van was the negligence which materially & proximately led to the accident.—BURKIN v. BILEZIKDJI (1889), 53 J. P. 760; 5 T. L. R. 673.

377. Reckless or careless driving — Crowded thoroughfare.]—The car would pass within 2 or 3 inches of the pavement, where there were a great number of people, & where anything might project over the edge of the pavement & be caught by the splinter bar. It was the duty of the driver under those circumstances to take the greatest care, to go as slowly as possible, & to give some warning of the approach of the car. The evidence shows that the driver was going very fast & gave no signal of his approach. . . . There is thus ample evidence of negligence on his part (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—MARTIN v. NORTH METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS CO. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 600, C. A.

379. —— Insufficient room to pass stationary vehicle.]—Two men who were wheeling a truck along a narrow road, on seeing a tramcar approach them, set the truck on end & backed it against the wall by which the road was bounded to allow the car room to pass. The driver of the car slowed down, & after the front part of the car had passed in safety, drove on at an increased speed, with the result that the car struck the truck which crushed one of the men against the wall & fatally injured him. In an action brought by the widow against the owner of the car under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), the jury found a verdict for pltf.:—Held: there was evidence of negligence to go to the jury.—LEAVER v. PONTYPRIDD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1911), 76 J. 384. Breach of regulations under Motor Car Acts.]—The driver of a motor car, when nearing a cart & horse, knowing that his hooter was out of order, slowed down to six miles an hour. When abreast of the cart the horse became frightened & bolted. The driver was thrown & fatally injured. The dependant claimed compensation from the master, who brought in the driver of the motor car as a third party. The county ct. judge found that the damage to the hooter was not the cause of the accident, & that it was not negligence on the part of the driver of the car to continue running on the road with the hooter silent. The widow of the deceased could not therefore have maintained an action under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), against the owner of the motor car for the loss of her husband. Accordingly he dismissed the respondent's claim for indemnity:—Held: there was evidence to support the county ct. judge's findings of fact. The mere breach of regulations made under the Motor Act, 1903 (c. 36), is not necessarily evidence of negligence.—LANKESTER v. MILLER, HETHERINGTON, THIRD PARTY (1910), 4 B. W. C. C. 80, C. A.

Two days before the accident, defts. had received back the lorry from the makers, a firm of known competence, to whom it had been sent to be overhauled & repaired. In an action by pltf. for the damage sustained, the county ct. judge found that defts. were not, but that the repairers were, negligent, & he gave judgment for pltf. on the ground that there had been a breach of Motor Cars (Use & Construction) Order, 1904, art. II., reg. 6, which breach caused the damage:—Held: (1) the mere breach of Motor Cars (Use & Construction) Order, 1904, art. II., reg. 6, did not of itself afford a cause of action to pltf.; (2) defts. did not at common law owe an absolute duty to pltf. that the lorry should be in a safe & proper condition; (3) defts. were not liable for the alleged negligence of the repairers; (4) pltf. having failed to establish knowledge or negligence on the part of defts. was not entitled to recover.—PHILLIPS v. BRITANNIA HYGIENIC LAUNDRY CO., [1923] 1 K. The rule does afford an evidential test as to the negligence of the one or the other driver which may be decisive in many cases in fixing responsibility, but it does not justify a driver in taking the risk of a collision which he might easily avoid in circumstances which would indicate to a man of ordinary prudence that an accident was likely to occur.—CARTER v. VADEBONCOEUR, [1922] 2 W. D. Injury to Pedestrians.

401. Duty of driver to give place to pedestrian.]—A servant of a railway co., while in the execution of his duty as such, committed a trespass by driving his waggon along a private road. While going along that road, he did not leave room between his waggon & the wall for a foot passenger to pass. In consequence the waggon, in turning out of the private road into a public road, crushed pltf.'s husband against the wall & killed him. In leaving the case to the jury, the judge did not ask them in so many words to consider whether the accident was or was not inevitable:—Held: (1) it was the duty of the driver of the waggon to see that there was room for any possible foot passenger to pass between his waggon & the wall, more especially as he was a trespasser, & as he did not do so he was guilty of negligence. (2) A judge is not bound to call the attention of the jury to every possible ground of defence, &, therefore, he was not guilty of misdirection by omitting to do so.—DUNN v. NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. CO. (1866), 30 J. P. 760.

402. Injury must be attributable to negligence of driver—Effect of contributory negligence of pedestrians.]—In an action for an injury to a person crossing a public highway, by driving against him & knocking him down, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was attributable to the negligence of the driver, & to that alone, before they can find a verdict for pltf.; & if they think that it was occasioned in any degree by the improper conduct of pltf. in crossing the road in an incautious & imprudent manner, they must find their verdict for deft.—HAWKINS v. COOPER (1838), 8 C. & P. 473, N. P.

403. ——— ———.]—(1) To sustain an action for an injury caused by the negligent driving of deft., the injury must have been caused by the negligence of deft. only, without the negligence of pltf. contributing in any way to the accident.

(2) It is the duty of a person, who is driving over a crossing for foot passengers at the entrance of a street, to drive slowly, cautiously & carefully; but it is also the duty of a foot passenger to use due care & caution in going upon such crossing, so as not to get among the carriages, & thus receive injury.—WILLIAMS v. RICHARDS (1852), 3 Car. & Kir. 81, N. 404. Failure to pull up in time—Broken rein.]—(1) A foot passenger has a right to cross the carriage road, & a person driving a carriage along the road is liable to an action if he do not take care so as to avoid driving against a foot passenger who is crossing the road; & if a person thus driving cannot pull up in time, because his reins break, that is no defence, as he is bound to have proper tackle. (2) In an action of trespass for driving a carriage against pltf., the defence of inevitable accident must be specially pleaded.—COTTERILL v. STARKEY (1839), 8 C. & P. 691, N. P.

410. Latent defect—Presumption of negligence.]—In an action in a county ct., for negligently driving a horse & cart, pltf. having simply proved the fact of a collision, under circumstances which might or might not amount to negligence, deft. proved that the accident arose from the horse suddenly beginning to kick, whereby the shafts of the cart were broken, & the driver thrown out, when the horse started off, & ran against & injured pltf.'s horse. The judge of the county ct., upon this evidence, ordered a verdict for pltf., being of opinion that the breaking of the shafts, even under the circumstances stated by deft.'s witnesses, showed a defect in the cart, which raised a presumption of negligence in the owner.—TEMPLEMAN

412. Absence of gross negligence — Gratuitous service.]—Action for negligence by deft. in conveying pltf., who was a decorator & gardener in his service, to perform for him certain work. Deft. drove, & while on the road the kingbolt of the carriage broke, the horses bolted, the carriage was overturned & pltf. injured. There was no evidence of gross neglect on the part of deft.:—Held: (1) in the absence of any evidence of gross negligence on the part of deft., pltf. was not entitled to recover damages; (2) the evidence did not disclose such negligence as to render deft., performing a gratuitous service for pltf., responsible.—MOFFATT v. BATEMAN (1869), L. 415. ——.]—Deft. was the owner of a motor car & frequently allowed a friend of his to drive it. On the occasion in question deft. got out of the car & allowed his friend to drive it to the latter's house, which was in a road with a very steep gradient. Deft.'s friend left the car in the road outside the house & after half an hour the car started down the hill & crashed into the area of pltf.'s house. In a county ct. action for damages for negligence the judge found that deft.'s friend was negligent & that deft. was responsible for such negligence, & he awarded pltf. damages:—Held: the fact of the car having run down the hill of itself when it was left unattended was sufficient evidence of negligence, &, although deft. was not in control of the car when the accident happened, yet, as he had the right of control, there was evidence on which the judge could find that deft. was responsible as principal.—PARKER v. MILLER (1926), 42 T. SUB-SECT. 7.—PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

421. Injury to plaintiff & wife — Right of plaintiff to recover damages in one action.]—In an action against a deft. for the injury occasioned by careless driving of his servant, pltf. may recover for injury done to his wife, as well as himself, without bringing a separate action for each.—ALISON v. FOISTER (1823), 1 C. & P. 21, N. P.

422. Particulars of injury — When ordered.]—In an action of tort for an injury to the person, as by careless driving, particulars will be ordered as to the nature & extent of the injuries, or of the claim for compensation, on an affidavit showing reasonable ground for the application.—WICKS v. MACNAMARA (1858), 3 H. & N. 568; 27 L. .]—See, generally, Part X., Sect. 6, sub-sect. 4, post.

424. —— Previous adjudication — Complaint under statute.]—The adjudication of a complaint against the driver of a Metropolitan stage carriage under London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843 (c. 86), for damage done to the carriage of the complainant, is no answer to an action against the owner of the carriage for the negligence of his servant, & the damage done to the carriage & to pltf. who was injured by the concussion.—ORGAR v. HORNE (1845), 5 L. T. O. S. 93.

425. —— —— —— Acceptance of compensation.]—Pltf. was knocked off his cab by the furious driving of an omnibus of defts., for which one of defts.' drivers was summarily convicted under London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843 (c. 86), s. 28. Pltf. gave evidence upon the hearing but was not complainant. The magistrate asked him if £10 would compensate him for his injuries, & he said certainly not. The magistrate adjudged the payment of half this amount by the driver under the latter part of the said section, & pltf. accepted the money which was actually paid by defts.

Pltf. brought this action for damages for the negligence of defts.' driver, & defts. pleaded as a bar thereto this award of the magistrate & pltf.'s acceptance of the amount.

The action was tried in a county ct., & pltf. admitted the magistrate's adjudication & his own acceptance of the money, but no record of the conviction was produced. The county ct. judge considered this no sufficient evidence of the order; & that if it were, the order was no answer to the action. The jury found a verdict of £100:—Held: pltf.'s admission was sufficient evidence of the order; & that by his acceptance of the money his claim for compensation had become res judicata, & could not be maintained.—WRIGHT v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO. (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 271; 46 L. J. Q. B. 429; 36 L. T. 590; 41 J. P. 486; 25 W. R. 647, D. C.

426. —— —— —— ——.]—Defts.' servant, in the course of driving their motor lorry, did damage to the extent of £29 11*s.* 1*d.* to an electric standard belonging to pltfs., who summoned defts. to appear before two justices, on a charge under Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 15), s. 20. The justices awarded pltfs. the sum of £5 in satisfaction. Afterwards pltfs. brought an action in the county ct. against defts., claiming the balance of £24 11*s.* 1*d.* as damages for the negligence of their servant, & the county ct. judge gave pltfs. judgment for that amount:—Held: the words of Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 15), s. 20, "by way of satisfaction" meant "in full satisfaction," & the award of the justices was a bar to the maintenance of the county ct. action.—BIRMINGHAM CORPN. v. ALLSOPP (S.) & SONS, LTD. (1918), 88 L. J. K. B. 549; 119 L. T. 775; 35 T. L. R. 24; 16 L. G. R. 862, D. C.

—— Contributory negligence.]—See Part X., Sect. 2, post.

427. Evidence — Statement by occupant of vehicle causing damage.]—If the carriage of A. strike against the cart of B., & a person who sees it demand the address of the owner of the carriage, the address given by a person in the carriage is admissible in evidence; but a statement that any damage done will be paid for is not so.

In an action for negligent driving, a plan, which is to be put into the hands of the witnesses, should merely show the street, the pavement, the turnings, corners, etc., & not the supposed position of the carriages; but, if it does so, the judge

429. Hotel keeper recommending visitor to private house—Accommodation at hotel not available—Theft by visitor—Liability of hotel keeper.]—Deft., a hotel proprietor, had a visitor, for whom he had no longer a room, & asked pltf., who lived close by, to take the visitor in. During the visitor's stay at the hotel there had been nothing to suggest that he was not perfectly respectable, & deft. formed the honest opinion that the visitor was a respectable man. On a previous occasion deft. had told pltf. that he would send only "nice people" to her. Pltf. took the visitor in, & the visitor committed a theft. In an action for negligence on the part of deft. in not making inquiries about the visitor:—Held: on the assumption that deft. was under a duty to pltf., yet, as no inquiries which deft. could have made could reasonably have led him to suspect that the visitor was not respectable, the action failed.—HUGHES v. BAILLY (1920), 36 T. 433. Liability dependent on breach of duty.]—A child three years & a half old strayed upon a railway & had its leg cut off by a passing train :—Held : in the absence of any evidence to show that the child got there through some neglect or default on the part of the co., they were not responsible for the injury.

I was wholly unable to discover any evidence of negligence on the part of the servants of the co. (ERLE, C.J.).—SINGLETON v. EASTERN COUNTIES RY. Co. (1859), 7 C. B. N. S. 287 ; 114 E. R. 827 ; sub nom. SINGLETON v. SOUTH-EASTERN RY. Co., 34 L. T. O. S. 67.

Pltf., a child of four years & a half old, having been sent on an errand, was shortly afterwards found lying on the level crossing, a foot having been cut o by a passing train :—Held : there was evidence to go to the jury that the accident was caused by the neglect of defts. to fence.—WILLIAMS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. 435. ——.] — In a field belonging to defts., & abutting on a highway, children were in the habit of playing. A cart track crossed the field to a level crossing over a railway, & on the other side of the railway there was a piece of land used for the purpose of tipping rubbish. By arrangement with the railway co. defts. had the use of the tip, & their carts were constantly crossing the field to the tip. Pltf., a child of one year & nine months, who had been playing in the field wandered to the level crossing, & then along the railway line, where she was injured by a passing train. There was no evidence that any child playing in the field had ever before gone over the level crossing. In an action to recover damages in respect of those injuries, the jury found that defts. were negligent in leaving the gate from the highway into the field, & also the level crossing gate open, & judgment was entered for pltf. :—Held : pltf. was not entitled to recover inasmuch as the facts did not establish any duty on the part of defts. towards pltf., & there was no evidence that the accident was in fact caused by any act or omission of defts.' servants.

The real causa causans of the accident was the gross neglect of the father & mother (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—SCHOFIELD v. BOLTON CORPN. (1910), 26 T. L. R. 230 ; 54 Sol. Jo. 213, C. A.

The yard was separated from the highway by a wall made of upright flagstones, which had not been repaired & was in a rotten & dangerous condition. A child who was lawfully in the yard, while playing with other children there, placed her hands on a part of the wall which fell, causing her serious injury :—Held : the owners not being in occupation & control of the premises were not liable in negligence to an invitee, & although the condition of the wall was such as to make it a public nuisance to persons passing along the highway, pltf. had no right of action, as the accident happened to her when she was in the yard, & not on public premises.—BROMLEY v. MERCER, [1922] 2 K. C. Existence of Danger.

450. Duty to guard against.] — A railway co. kept a turntable unlocked, & therefore dangerous for children, on their land close to a public road. The co.'s servants knew that children were in the habit of trespassing & playing with the turntable, to which they obtained easy access through a well-worn gap in a fence which the railway co. were bound by statute to maintain. A child between four & five years old playing with other children on the turntable having been seriously injured:—Held: there was evidence for a jury of actionable negligence on the part of the railway co.

[There was] evidence from which a jury might well infer not merely a licence, but an invitation, which fixed defts. with a high responsibility towards those people to whom such an invitation would mainly appeal, namely, those who from their tender age would be deemed incapable of caution & therefore of contributory negligence (LORD COLLINS).

The authorities from Lynch v. Nurdin, No. 118, ante, downwards establish, it would appear to me, first, that every person must be taken to know that young children & boys are of a very inquisitive & frequently mischievous disposition, & are likely to meddle with whatever happens to come within their reach; secondly, that public streets, roads, & public places may not unlikely be frequented by children of tender years & boys of this character; &, thirdly, that if vehicles or machines are left by their owners, or by the agents of the owners, in any place which children & boys of this kind are rightfully entitled to frequent, & are not unlikely actually to frequent, unattended or unguarded & in such a state or position as to be calculated to attract or allure these boys or children to intermeddle with them, & to be dangerous if intermeddled with, then the owners of those machines or vehicles will be responsible in damages for injuries sustained by these juvenile intermeddlers through the negligence of the former in leaving their machines or vehicles in such places under such conditions, even though the accident causing the injury be itself brought about by the intervention of a third party, or the injured person, in any particular case, be a trespasser on the vehicle or machine at the moment the accident occurred (LORD ATKINSON).

The origin of the legal right to be in the particular place in which the boy or child comes in contact with the vehicle or machine, or the mode in which that legal right has been acquired, is, in my view, irrelevant. The right may be only the restricted right of a bare licencee, or it may be the more extended right of a person invited (LORD ATKINSON).—COOKE v. MIDLAND GREAT WESTERN RY. OF IRELAND, [1909] A. 453. —— Danger familiar or obvious.]—Where the danger is familiar & obvious no special responsibility attaches to the owner of land in respect of an accident to a child of tender years: but where the damage is not familiar & obvious, but is known to the owner of the land, he is not justified in allowing things of attractive appearance, known to him to be dangerous, to be in a place of public resort & recreation without any special care & warning.

The liability of defts. in cases of this kind rests, I think, in the last resort upon their knowledge that by their action they may bring children of tender years, unable to take care of themselves, yet inquisitive & easily tempted, into contact, in a place in which they, the children, have a right to be, with things alluring or tempting to them, & possibly in appearance harmless, but which, unknown to them & well known to defts., are hurtful or dangerous if meddled with (LORD ATKINSON).

A measure of care appropriate to the inability . . . of those who are immature . . . is due from others, who know of or ought to anticipate the presence of such persons within the scope & hazard of their own operations (LORD SUMNER).—GLASGOW CORPN. v. TAYLOR, [1922] 1 A. 457. ——.]—A railway co. had at one of their stations in London a moving staircase which led from the booking hall to the underground platforms next the lines. The staircase was open to the street in the sense that there was no physical obstruction to prevent any one in the booking hall walking on to the staircase. There was a ticket collector stationed at a barrier at the bottom of the staircase. Children from the neighbourhood were in the habit of frequently, especially in the evening, playing upon the staircase by running down it & up again, but they were always warned off both by the ticket collector at the bottom & by the clerk in the booking office. A railway policeman, whose duties took him into the booking hall twice an hour, always drove the children away when he saw them there. On the evening of the accident hereinafter mentioned the policeman drove the children away, but when he was gone they returned, & with them was pltf., a boy of five & a half years of age, in charge of an older boy. The latter before going into the booking hall looked round to see if the policeman had gone away. The older boy played on the staircase, leaving pltf. in the booking hall. In the booking hall the rubber band, which worked the staircase round a wheel, was open to sight & touch by any one in the booking hall. Pltf. placed his hand in such a position that it was caught by the moving band & seriously injured. Pltf. claimed damages, on the ground that defts. were negligent in that they took no precaution to prevent children from playing in the booking hall & on & with the staircase, & permitted pltf. to be in the booking hall, & did not guard or watch the staircase or wheel & moving balustrade:—Held: pltf. was, in the circumstances, a trespasser, & defts. were not liable.—HARDY v. CENTRAL LONDON RY. P. brought an action against two defts., G. & H., for negligence. At the close of pltf.'s case there was no evidence against G., but there was evidence against H. The judge declined at that time to enter a verdict for G., but said he would wait till the close of the evidence in the cause. H. called witnesses, the effect of whose evidence was to throw the blame on G. They were cross-examined by G.'s counsel. Ultimately a verdict was found against G. & in favour of H.:—Held: the judge was not obliged to enter a verdict in favour of G. at the close of pltf.'s case, & the evidence subsequently adduced might properly be taken into consideration against G., just as if H. had been called by P., G.'s counsel having had the opportunity of cross-examining.—PARNELL v. GREAT WESTERN RY. On an application by pltfs. to add the water co. as defts.:—Held: the causes of action against defts. & the water co. being in respect of separate torts, though the resulting damage might be the same in each case, the water co. could not be joined as defts.—THOMPSON v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, [1899] 1 Q. SECT. 1.—FUNCTIONS OF JUDGE AND JURY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See, generally, EVIDENCE, Vol. XXII., pp. 22–34, Nos. 32–114.

478. General principles.]—It is a fit question for the jury to decide, whether it was the duty of defts. to have supported pltfs.' wall, while they were removing the adjoining wall, & to have inquired & ascertained that there was no cellar beneath the yard, before they deposited a heavy load of bricks upon it. If the jury should decide this question in the affirmative, defts'. negligence & misconduct in these particulars are such as render them liable in law (ABBOTT, C.J.).—KING v. WILLIAMSON & CLAPTON (1822), Dow. & Ry. N. P. 35.

Annotation:—Mentd. Nicholson v. Brooke (1848), 2 Exch. 213.

479. ——.]—On the platform of defts.' station a weighing machine was placed close to the line. Pltf. being at the station on an occasion when it was much crowded, fell over the machine & was hurt; the machine had been in the same position for five years, & no complaint had ever been made of it:—Held: it was for the judge to decide whether there was any evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of defts.

Whether there is any evidence is always a question to be determined by the judge.—CORNMAN v. EASTERN COUNTIES RY. Co. (1859), 4 H. & N. 781; 29 L. J. Ex. 94; 33 L. T. O. S. 302; 5 Jur. N. S. 657; 157 E. R. 1050.

480. ——.] — Defts. having contracted with pltf. to receive his ship into their dock at a specified time, & having given him notice that they could then receive her, she was brought to the dock in ballast upon a stormy day, under the charge of her captain & a pilot. Owing to the breaking of one of the chains of the dock gates, defts. were unable to let her in. The captain, after consultation with the pilot as to the best course to be pursued, anchored the ship outside the gates. At the turn of the tide she grounded on a sand-bank & broke her back. Pltf. having brought an action against defts. for the damage done to the ship, two questions were put to the jury upon the trial: (a) was it possible to have taken the ship to a place of safety; & (b) if so, was it the captain's or the pilot's fault that she was not taken thereof? On question (a) the jury were unable to agree, & in reply to (b), found that neither the captain nor the pilot had been guilty of negligence. The judge thereupon directed a verdict for pltf., with leave to enter it for deft., the ct. to draw inferences of fact consistent with the finding of the jury:—Held: on the facts & finding of the jury, the damage done to the ship might be fairly & reasonably considered as the consequence of defts.' breach of contract.

It is necessary to ascertain the facts of the case as found by the jury, for with evidence so contradictory & repugnant we cannot find any verdict ourselves. It is not our province. If the facts can be ascertained, then what is the law applicable to them? We apprehend when the facts of the case are known it is the province of the ct. to say for what matters damages are to be given, but the amount of damages is a question for the jury quite as much as the credit due to the witnesses (POLLOCK, C.B.).

The decision of twelve jurymen instructed from the bench in the rules of law, but exercising their own judgment on a subject connected with the business of life with which they are familiar, would practically lead to a result often more just & equitable than any mere rule of law could arrive at (POLLOCK, C.B.).—WILSON v. NEWPORT DOCK CO. 482. ——.] — Where there is conflicting evidence on a question of fact, whatever may be the opinion of the judge who tries the cause as to the value of that evidence, he must leave the consideration of it for the decision of the jury.

S. went to the Dublin & Kingstown railway station to accompany a relative who was going by the up train to Dublin. It was necessary to cross the line in order to get the ticket. S. went through a gate, down a pathway, & across the line in front of the train going to Dublin, which was then slowly approaching the station from Kingstown. The time was night. There were notice boards warning persons not to cross the line at that point, but there was evidence that the railway servants never interrupted any persons who did cross the line there. S. crossed in safety, he obtained a ticket for his relative, who, with two friends, was standing on the bank by the side of the up line. The train to Dublin had, in the meantime, arrived, & was standing still. S. having got the ticket began to recross the line, being then, not in front of the Dublin train, but behind it, in consequence of which that train prevented him seeing anything on the down line from Dublin; & he moved on. As he was going on the down line, which ran from Dublin to Kingstown, the down express train caught him & he was killed. It was a rule of the railway that the express train should always sound a whistle on approaching the station, & the driver of that train swore that he had whistled twice, & some other servants of the railway co. swore that they had heard the whistling. of S. had, in their evidence for pltf., sworn that they were in a situation to hear the whistle if it had been sounded, & that they had not heard it; & one of them who could see the down train approaching, swore that he heard the "rumbling" of the approaching train, but heard no whistle: —Held: (1) this was a case which was properly left to the jury, for that where there was contradictory evidence on facts, the jurors & not the judge must decide upon them.

(2) The contributory negligence of pltf. must be established affirmatively, & the absence of evidence to negative any such negligence will not entitle defts. to a verdict as it would do if the burden of proving that the accident happened without any such negligence lay upon pltf. . . . Both in pleading & in practice the contributory negligence of pltf. has always been dealt with as if it was a separate issue from that of defts.' negligence & has always been so presented to the jury, the judge directing that the affirmative lay upon defts. In an action against the landlord for negligence in not fencing the hole, & in which pltf. alleged that he was in the house as a guest, the jury found for pltf.

The ct. refused a rule to enter a nonsuit, which was asked for on the ground that there was no evidence, either of negligence on the part of deft., or of pltf. being in the house as a guest.—AXFORD v. PRIOR (1866), 14 W. R. 611.

Ptlf., in course of his usual duty at night, closed some gates between this station & a warehouse also belonging to the co., & in doing so was struck by a heavy plank & seriously injured. Defts.' servants were seen at work upon the wall just above these gates a few hours before the accident, & it was suggested they had placed this plank across the gates whilst open for the purpose of a scaffolding, & left it there when they finished their day's work. One of the gates was fastened back by a rope, which pltf. had to untie before he could shut it. There was no evidence that defts. or their servants knew these gates were usually shut at night. Pltf. was nonsuited:—Held: this nonsuit was right, as the evidence fell short of raising any presumption of negligence against defts.—PEARSON v. PLUCKNETT (1869), 20 L. T. 662.

In order to show the horse's pace a servant of deft. led it with a halter down a lane formed by the spectators on one side & a blank wall on the other. There was no barrier between the horse & the spectators, & when the horse was about ten yards from pltf. another servant of deft. struck it with a whip in order to make it trot. On being struck the horse swerved into & through the crowd, & kicked & injured pltf. It was a usual thing for a man to be stationed with a whip at the particular point when horses were brought out for sale. There was no evidence as to the kind of blow that was given, nor the character of the horse, nor how it was being led, nor that it was customary to put a barrier for the protection of the public in yards where horses were being sold. Pltf. sued deft. to recover damages for injuries caused by the negligence of deft.'s servant:—Held: there was no evidence upon which the jury could reasonably find negligence on the part of deft.—ABBOTT v. FREEMAN (1876), 35 L. 498. Plaintiff must show negligent or unusual conduct.]—A public footway crossed a railway on a level. Pltf., while crossing on the footway in the evening, after dark, was knocked down & injured by a train of defts. on the crossing. He stated in evidence at the trial, that he did not see the train until it was close upon him; that he saw no lights on the train & heard no whistling. He stated also, that he did not hear any caution or warning given to him by any servant of the co. The driver & fireman of the engine were called on behalf of the co., & stated that there were lamps on the engine & train, which were lighted in due course on the night in question, at the commencement of the journey, & which, if lighted, could be seen for a considerable distance by any one standing at the crossing. A porter in defts.' employ also stated that he had seen pltf. at the crossing on the night in question, & had called to him not to cross. The judge at the trial ruled that there was evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of defts. which caused the injury to pltf.:—Held: there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury.

It is not enough, in order to make out a case to go to the jury, that the party injured did not see a light or hear a whistle. He must give evidence which ought to satisfy a jury that there was something negligent or unusual in the conduct of business on that night (MELLOR, J.).—ELLIS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1874), L. From the evidence given on behalf of pltf., it appeared that defts. were not the parties really liable & thereupon the county ct. judge nonsuited pltf., but deprived defts. of costs on the ground that they had not given every assistance to pltf. to enable her to determine who was the party liable:—Held: as the evidence for pltf. showed that she never could have recovered against defts., the judge should have entered judgment for them instead of nonsuiting pltf.—WESTGATE v. CROWE, [1908] 1 K. It was proved that the train had run through the station at the rate of 25 miles an hour, & pltf. admitted that he was somewhat deaf, & had not looked up the line before attempting to cross. The judge nonsuited him on the ground that he was responsible for the accident. On appeal to the Div. Ct. the nonsuit was set aside & a new trial ordered:—Held: the order for a new trial must be upheld, as the jury might reasonably have found on the evidence that pltf. had not acted without reasonable care, & defts. had been guilty of gross negligence.

Whenever facts which are not in conflict admit of two reasonable constructions, one in favour of pltf., the other in favour of deft., it is for the jury & not the judge to draw the inference. On the other hand, where the facts admit of but one reasonable construction, it is for the judge to decide the case upon the only ground on which it can be decided by any reasonable man (BOWEN, L.J.).—BROWN v. GREAT WESTERN RY. 507. ——.] — A railway line crossed a public footpath on the level, the approaches to the crossing being guarded by hand gates. A watchman who was employed by the railway co. to take charge of the gates & crossing during the day was withdrawn at night. The dead body of a man was found on the line near the level crossing at night, the man having been killed by a train which carried the usual head lights but did not whistle or otherwise give warning of its approach. No evidence was given of the circumstances under which the deceased got on to the line. An action on the ground of negligence having been brought by the administratrix of deceased, the jury found a verdict for pltf.:—Held: (1) even assuming, but without deciding, there was evidence of negligence on the part of the co., yet there was no evidence to connect such negligence with the accident; there was therefore no case to go to the jury & the ry. co. were not liable.

(2) Semble: where contributory negligence is alleged, the burden of proving it affirmatively rests upon deft.

I am of opinion that the onus of proving affirmatively that there was contributory negligence on the part of the person injured rests, in the first instance, upon defts., & that in the absence of evidence tending to that conclusion, pltf. is not bound to prove the negative in order to entitle her to a verdict in her favour. . . . In expressing my own opinion I have added the words "in the first instance," because in the course of the trial the onus may be shifted to pltf. so as to justify a finding in defts.' favour to which they would not otherwise have been entitled (LORD WATSON).—WAKELIN v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 512. ——.]—(1) Pltf., a labourer, in the service of a railway co., was employed to fill trucks with ballast at a pit, & to move them when filled along temporarily laid rails on to the permanent rails, & there attach them to an engine. Whilst so employed, one of the temporary rails, in consequence of its having been insecurely placed, through the negligence of another servant of the co., whose duty it was to superintend the laying of them, springing up from the pressure of the loaded truck, struck pltf., & severely injured him: —Held: the injury having been occasioned by the negligence of a fellow-workman of pltf., whilst both were engaged in a common occupation, the co. were not responsible, in the absence of evidence that they had knowingly entrusted the duty of laying the rails to an incompetent person.

(2) Pltf. was employed by defts. in constructing a scaffolding for a large building which they were engaged in erecting. Being short of materials, pltf. applied to one M., the foreman of the scaffolders, for the necessary supply of boards. M. applied to P., who was defts.' general foreman or manager, who refused to furnish them, saying that pltf. must get on as he best could. Pltf. proceeded with his work, &, having no flooring to stand on, placed his foot upon a putlog, from the rounded surface of which he slipped, &, falling to the ground, was crippled. In an action against defts.. charging them with negligence in not supplying sufficient materials, whereby the danger of the work was unnecessarily aggravated, the jury found that the scaffolding was insufficient & unsafe, to the knowledge of both the general manager P., & the foreman of the scaffolders, M., but not to the knowledge of defts., who personally never interfered with the works; & further that pltf. himself was guilty of no negligence:—Held: defts. were not responsible, pltf. & P. being fellow-workmen engaged in a common service, & there being no evidence of personal negligence on defts.' part, in failing to supply sufficient & safe materials, or in selecting an incompetent foreman.

It is not enough for pltf. to show that he has sustained an injury under circumstances which may lead to a suspicion, or even a fair inference, that there may have been negligence on the part of deft.; but he must go on & give evidence of some specific act of negligence on the part of the person against whom he seeks compensation (WILLES, J.).—LOVEGROVE v. LONDON, BRIGHTON, ETC. itself. The train only partially went up to the main platform, leaving the last two carriages within the tunnel, which had no light within it, & on the occasion in question was filled with steam. The last carriage but one came opposite the narrow platform, the last carriage was opposite the hard rubbish. A passenger in the last carriage but one, who was called as a witness at the trial, heard the name of the station called out in the usual way & got out upon the narrow platform. He then heard a groaning, & proceeding further back into the tunnel found B. lying on the rubbish with his legs between the wheels of the last carriage, but neither of them had touched him. B.'s leg was broken, & he had received other injuries, from the effects of all of which he died. The witness heard the warning "Keep your seats" & shortly afterwards the train moved on. On these facts the judge at the trial held that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury, & he directed a nonsuit. Owing to a strong expression of opinion by the jurymen he took their finding, on the assumption that there ought to be a verdict for pltf., as to the amount of damages. The nonsuit was then entered, with leave to move to enter the verdict for the damages assessed:—Held: the ruling at Nisi Prius could not be sustained; the case ought not to have been withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, for the evidence furnished matter on which it was necessary to take the opinion of a jury.—BRIDGES v. NORTH LONDON RY. 516. ——.]—Defts.' railway crossed a level crossing which was some 20 yards distant from a foot-bridge. Both the crossing & the bridge were private crossings intended for the use of persons employed in a neighbouring manufactory. About 30 yards from the crossing was a box where a railway man was commonly stationed, who was sometimes shouted to by persons wishing to pass the level crossing with carts, & answered "All right." Pltf., a boy of eleven years of age, who was employed at the manufactory, having occasion to go over the line, was waiting at the level crossing until one train had passed, but was knocked down & severely injured, when in the act of crossing, by another train, which he had not observed, & which was passing in the opposite direction immediately afterwards. At the trial there was evidence that the bridge was dirty & not lighted at the time of the accident; that the train did not whistle; that pltf. knew the bridge, having crossed it several times; & that the man at the box used to bring out a stick to stop him from going over the bridge, but that when the accident happened he was not present. There was no evidence to show what the man's special duties were, or whether he had any duties in respect to foot passengers. Upon the evidence the judge was asked to nonsuit pltf.:—Held: there was evidence of negligence to go to the jury, & the conduct of the railway man was a distinct breach of duty which amounted to negligence & contributed to the accident.—CLARKE v. MIDLAND RY. CO. (1880), 43 L. T. 381.

517. ——.]—In an action brought under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), by a widow for the loss of her husband, it was proved that deceased intended to travel on defts.' line to N. from W., by a train leaving at 9.50 p.m. On the up platform, from which he would have had to start, there was no waiting room, & the night being very cold, he had gone into that on the down platform. When the train was heard approaching, deceased went quickly along the down platform, so as to cross over to the up platform, which he could only reach by going over a level crossing. In attempting to cross the line when the train was only about 20 yards from the level crossing he was knocked down by the engine & killed. At the approach of a train it was usual for a porter to stand at the level crossing & warn the passengers; but on the occasion in question there was no porter there, & no notice was given of the danger, either by any bell being rung or any whistling by the driver of the engine:—Held: there being evidence of the negligence of defts. the case had been properly allowed to go to the jury, as both the primary facts in the case & the inference of fact to be drawn from them were not so clear that the jury acting fairly & impartially had been bound to come to a conclusion conclusive against pltf.—WRIGHT v. MIDLAND RY. 518. ——.]—Pltf.'s husband was run over & killed by a train of defts. under the following circumstances. Defts.' line crossed a public highway on the level. There was a gatekeeper's lodge near the crossing, where a servant of defts. was stationed, whose duty under the co.'s regulations was to attend to the carriage gates at the crossing, &, whenever a train was approaching, to stand by the rails &, if the line was clear, exhibit as a signal a white flag by day or a white light by night. There were lamps on the carriage gates which showed, when they were closed across the highway, a white light, &, when they were closed across the line, a red light. Deceased, who lived near the crossing on the other side of the line, called at the gatekeeper's lodge between 8 & 9 o'clock on a December night to inquire whether his wife was there, & found the gatekeeper sitting in his lodge reading. Being told that his wife was not there, he left the lodge. Though a train had been signalled, the gatekeeper gave him no warning & did not go out to signal the train. Deceased attempted to cross at the level crossing, & was caught by the train & killed. The train carried lights which were visible by any one about to cross at the level crossing for a distance of more than 600 yards. The engine driver whistled ten seconds before the train passed over the crossing, which it did at the rate of from thirty five to forty miles an hour. The engine driver stated in evidence that, when approaching the crossing, he saw the white light on the carriage gates, but did not receive any hand signal from the gatekeeper:—Held: there was upon the above facts evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of defts. by which, & not by any negligence on his own part, the death of pltf.'s husband was caused, & therefore the judge at the trial was right in not withdrawing the case from the jury.—SMITH v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. 519. ——.]—Pltf. sued deft. co. to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by her at one of their railway stations. She intended travelling from that station. The night was very foggy, & the lamps on the platform did not show through the fog. While walking along the platform pltf. fell on to the rails & was injured. Several other people had fallen off the platform earlier on the same evening. The jury found that the accident was due to the negligence of defts.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover as the circumstances imposed upon defts. a duty to take all reasonable precautions to protect pltf. effectively from the dangers besetting all movement on the platform on the night in question, & there was evidence which entitled the jury to find defts. had failed to discharge the duty that rested upon them.—LONDON, TILBURY, & SOUTHEND RY. Scintilla of evidence or mere surmise.]—On the platform of a railway station there were two doors in close proximity to each other, the one, for necessary purposes, had painted over it the words "For gentlemen," the other had over it the words "Lamp-room." Pltf., having occasion to go to the urinal, inquired of a stranger where he should find it, & having received a direction, by mistake opened the door of the "lamp-room" & fell down some steps & was injured. In an action against the railway co.:—Held: in the absence of evidence that the place was more than ordinarily dangerous, the judge was justified in nonsuiting pltf., on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the co.

A scintilla of evidence, or a mere surmise that there may have been negligence on the part of defts., clearly would not justify the judge in leaving the case to the jury: there must be evidence on which they might reasonably & properly conclude that there was negligence (WILLIAMS, J.).—TOOMEY v. LONDON, BRIGHTON & SOUTH COAST RY. E. Evidence of Contributory Negligence.

(a) In General.

521. Whether case may be withdrawn from jury.]—A railway crossed an occupation way which connected lands of pltf. lying on each side of the railway, & which was also a public footway. The crossing being on the level, at the point of intersection the railway co. put up high gates of which they gave a key to pltf. The gates obstructed the footway, but the co. did not make a bridge over the railway, or provide a stile for foot passengers in pursuance of Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), ss. 46, 61, 68. The key having been lost, one of the gates was left open, & some colts of pltf. having escaped on to the railway were killed by a passing train:—Held: it was a question for the jury, whether pltf. by his own negligence had contributed to the accident.—ELLIS v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 523. ——.]—Pltf., a passenger by defts.' railway, in getting into a railway carriage at a station, placed his left hand on the back of the open door to aid him in mounting the step. There was conflicting evidence as to whether there was a proper handle affixed to the carriage, to the right hand of the door. The night was dark, & pltf. did not see any handle. He had a parcel in his right hand. Before he had completely entered the carriage, the guard, without any previous warning, closed the door, & crushed his hand between the back of the door & the door post. In an action for the injury thus sustained:—Held: there was evidence of negligence on the part of the co.'s servant, & no evidence of such contributory negligence on the part of pltf. as to entitle defts. to a nonsuit.—FORDHAM v. LONDON, BRIGHTON, & SOUTH COAST RY. The crowd, caused by special excursion traffic, of which defts. had previous notice, had been allowed to enter the station & to disperse over the platform at will. No precautions were taken to regulate its movements. On the approach of a train pltf. aforesaid was, through the pressure caused by the swaying of the crowd, thrust off the platform & hurt. An action for negligence being brought against defts. in respect of the injury thus occasioned, pltfs. were nonsuited on the ground that the above facts were no evidence of negligence:—Held: the nonsuit must be set aside, as the precautions to be taken by the co., the character of the crowd, & all the other circumstances, were questions for the jury.

Whether facts amount to negligence.]—Case against a railway co. for so carelessly & improperly managing & directing an engine on their railway by their servants, that sparks flew from the engine upon a stack of beans standing in an adjoining field, belonging to pltf., whereby the stack was destroyed. A case stated for the opinion of the ct., under Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), alleged that the engines used upon the railway were such as were usually employed on railways, for the purpose of propelling the trains & carriages thereon; & that the engine, from which the sparks that set fire to the stack in question flew, was used at the time in the ordinary manner, & for purposes authorised by the Act of Parliament incorporating the co.:—Held: the facts stated were not sufficient to enable the ct. to infer negligence on the part of defts. so as to justify the directing of the entry of a verdict for pltf.; but they did not show such an absence of negligence as to warrant the directing of the entry of a non-suit.—ALDRIDGE v. GREAT WESTERN RY. Pltf. was a passenger by defts.' railway. The train in which she was overshot the platform. The porters called to the passengers to keep their seats, but not so that pltf. could hear. The train was not backed. 537. ——.]—Where the conduct of a railway co.'s servant is such as to lead a passenger to think that he is intended to alight, & it proves to be dangerous to alight, there is, in the absence of evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the passenger, evidence of negligence on the part of the company for a jury to consider.

Pltf., a female, arrived by defts.' railway at a small station, as the part of the train in which she was riding reaching beyond the end of the short platform. The only servant of the co. being engaged, pltf. attempted, after waiting until she feared the train would move on, to descend without assistance, &, in so doing, she slipped & was injured:—Held: there was evidence of negligence on the part of the co., which ought to be left to a jury.—ROBSON v. NORTH EASTERN RY. 543. —— Alternative methods of work.]—Where there are two modes of doing a work in a public highway from which damage may result to a passer by, the one mode more dangerous than the other, though both are usual modes, it is for the jury to say whether the adoption of the former mode amounts under all the circumstances to negligence. A passer by who is casually appealed to by a workman for information respecting a thing which the latter is doing in a public thoroughfare, is not to be considered a "volunteer assistant," so as to exonerate the workman's master from responsibility for an injury resulting to the former from the workman's negligent mode of doing the work.—CLEVELAND v. SPIER (1864), 16 C. It was the duty of pltf. to drive the carts & to load & unload the goods which were carried in them. Among the horses was one of a vicious nature & unfit to be driven even by a careful driver. Pltf. objected to drive this horse, & told the foreman of the stable that it was unfit to be driven, to which the foreman replied that pltf. must go on driving it, & that if any accident happened his employer would be responsible. Pltf. continued to drive the horse, & while sitting on his proper place in the cart was kicked by the animal, & his leg was broken:—Held: upon the facts a jury might find deft. to be liable, for there was evidence of negligence on the part of his foreman, & the circumstances did not conclusively show that the risk was voluntarily incurred by pltf.—YARMOUTH v. FRANCE (1887), 19 Q. (2) In such a case the ct. refused to grant a new trial, though the judge who presided, after summing up, told the jury deft. was liable, even though the accident were unavoidable, & no blame were imputable to him; omitting to direct the jury to consider whether the accident was unavoidable or occasioned by any fault in deft.—WAKEMAN v. ROBINSON (1823), 1 Bing. 213; 8 Moore, C. 560. Point not raised at trial.]—In an action against a railway co. for negligence in the management of their railway at one of their stations, whereby pltf., a passenger, was injured, the defence relied on by defts.' counsel was, that the accident arose entirely from pltf.'s own want of caution, & that the co. were wholly blameless. The evidence showed that pltf. arrived at the station about two minutes or less before the time of departure of the train, & that, in running along the line, at a place where he ought not to have gone, in order to reach the train, which was some distance ahead on the opposite side of the railway, he fell over a switch-handle, & was considerably hurt The judge left it to the jury to say whether the injury to pltf. was occasioned by the negligence & want of proper care of defts., or resulted entirely from pltf.'s own carelessness, as the co. contended. The jury having found for pltf.:—Held: the judge was, under the circumstances, warranted in leaving the case to the jury upon the only points raised by the parties; & the omission to call their attention to the intermediate case of the negligence of both parties being contributory to the accident, was no misdirection. Qu.: whether the doctrine of contribution is applicable to a case of this sort, of tort founded upon contract.—MARTIN v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. 562. Evidence not amounting to negligence.]—Pltf., while passing along an occupation road which crossed defts.' railway on a level, was knocked down & injured by a train of defts., owing, as was alleged, to defts.' negligence. There were gates across the road left unfastened, & defts. had at one time kept a gatekeeper, but had ceased to keep one some time before the accident. About three years before the accident defts. had obtained powers under an Act to make a new road & discontinue the level occupation road; the powers of the Act were to be exercised within five years, & then to cease; & nothing had been done as to the road till after the accident. The jury negatived negligence in the driver of the engine; but found for pltf. on the ground generally of "negligence as to the crossing." The judge, in summing up, had left to the jury as evidence of negligence in defts. (inter alia), the omission to keep a gatekeeper, & the omission to exercise the powers of their Act:—Held: a misdirection.

by 8 p.m. On this occasion they did not arrive till after midnight, & were then found to be in a damaged & exhausted condition. G. then brought an action against respt. co. in the county ct., on the ground that the injuries had been caused by resp.'s negligence. After evidence had been given in support of pltf.'s case, counsel for the defence submitted that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury, but the judge held that a primâ facie case had been made out. Evidence was then given by the co. to the effect that the delay in the arrival of the cattle was due solely to shunting operations to avoid passenger trains. The judge thereupon withdrew the case from the jury, & gave judgment for the co. G. appealed:—Held: though the county ct. judge was wrong in withdrawing the case from the jury, & should have left it to them with a strong direction to find a verdict for defts., yet that it would be useless to send the case back for trial, as the only verdict that could be found on the evidence must be a verdict for defts.—GODDARD v. MIDLAND RY. The horse was properly boxed at Waterloo & upon arrival at Surbiton the train was divided, & the front portion was shunted to allow a horsebox to be taken off. The horse box in which pltf.'s horse was was in the rear portion of the train. Before the front portion of the train was backed on to the rear portion the horse was heard groaning & on the box being opened it was found lying on its back with its feet in the air, the ropes to the headstall being still secured & drawn tight. The horse was got out, when it was found to be injured in two or three places. There was no evidence of any improper slowing down or stopping of the train at Surbiton. The box was then converted into a loose box by taking out the partitions, which left exposed the hooks or hinges on which the partitions hung, & the horse was sent on by a later train to Guildford. The ct. came to the conclusion that there was no evidence that any of the injuries were occasioned between Surbiton & Guildford. 593. ——.]—Defts. were empowered by a local Act to construct & maintain certain waterworks & to appropriate certain streams & waters. The Act provided that as compensation for the taking of the water from a certain dike defts. should cause to flow from a reservoir into such dike a specified quantity of water per minute during every lawful working day; & further provided that in case of neglect on the part of defts. by, or in consequence of, which the specified quantity of water should not so flow, defts. should for every day on which such neglect should occur forfeit & pay to the occupiers of each of the mills & works affected thereby the sum of £5, & should, in addition make compensation for loss, damage or injury sustained by such occupiers in respect of which such penalties should be insufficient compensation. Pltfs., who were eight mill occupiers, alleged that by reason of the neglect of defts., the specified quantity of water did not flow into such dike for a period including forty three working days, & each pltf. claimed £215, the amount of the penalties of £5 per day for forty three days. At the trial of the action pltfs. proved that there was sufficient water in the reservoir to enable defts. to send down the statutory quantity, & that the pipes, if not defective, were sufficient in size to send down that quantity. It was further proved that such pipes require care & attention from time to time, but that defts.' pipes had not been inspected for a period of thirty years:—Held: defts. were under an obligation to use reasonable care to send down the statutory quantity of water, & the evidence given by pltfs. established a primâ facie case of neglect & cast upon defts. the burden of proving that they had used reasonable care.—BEAUMONT v. HUDDERSFIELD CORPN. 594. ——.]—A motor omnibus belonging to defts., in which pltf. was a passenger, "skidded" upon a road the surface of which was greasy from rain, & ran into an electric light standard, & pltf. was in consequence injured. At the trial of an action brought by pltf. in the county ct. in respect of the injury so occasioned to her, there was no evidence given for pltf. of anything, beyond the above-mentioned facts, in the nature of negligence on the part of any servant of defts. in the driving or management of the omnibus, or of any defect in the construction or condition of the particular omnibus, or that motor omnibuses generally were of such a character as to constitute a nuisance, but it was apparently assumed, & not disputed by defts., that motor omnibuses however well constructed, had a tendency to skid when the road was greasy. Defts. called no witnesses except as to quantum of damage. The case was left to the jury, who found a verdict for pltf., but subsequently the county ct. judge, being of opinion that there was no evidence for the jury of liability on the part of defts., entered judgment for them:—Held: upon the above-mentioned facts, there was no evidence for the jury that defts. allowing the motor omnibus to run under the circumstances constituted a nuisance, & therefore the decision of the county ct. judge was correct.

Without attempting to lay down any exhaustive classification of the cases in which the principle of res ipsa loquitur applies, it may generally be said that the principle only applies when the direct cause of the accident & so much of the surrounding circumstances as was essential to its occurrence, of an accident is not as a general rule primâ facie evidence of negligence. 595. ——.]—In Apr. 1922, pltfs. delivered their motor lorry to defts. to be completely overhauled & repaired & to be put in a safe condition. No restriction was placed by pltfs. on the amount of work to be done or the expense to be incurred on the motor lorry. In June defts. re-delivered the lorry to pltfs., purporting to have carried out the work required to be done satisfactorily. Two days after the lorry was returned to pltfs., & while it was being used in the normal course of business on the highway, a stub axle broke & a wheel came off which collided with & injured a motor van belonging to one P. P. subsequently brought an action against pltfs. in the county ct. to recover damages for negligence, & the county ct. judge gave judgment for P. That decision was reversed by the Div. Ct., with costs, & the Ct. of Appeal affirmed the decision of the Div. Ct. also with costs. In the various proceedings the present pltfs. incurred taxed costs amounting to £111 10s., & in addition solr. & client costs amounting to £35 10s. Pltfs. were unable to recover anything from P. in respect of these costs. In an action brought by pltfs. against defts. for negligence & breach of contract in failing to use reasonable care, skill & diligence in overhauling & repairing the motor lorry, the jury returned a verdict for pltfs.:—Held: as the defect in the stub axle was due to "fatigue" of the metal, & could not be discovered by a reasonable inspection, there was no evidence of negligence fit to be left to the jury against defts.

I think also that this is a case in which the rule res ipsa loquitur does not apply because it seems to me only to apply where pltf., in complaining, has no knowledge or means of knowledge as to what the actual cause of an accident was, & all that he is in a position to say is that it occurred in reference to a matter of which the person of whom pltf. was complaining had full control & full knowledge, & the thing of which he was complaining would not have happened if the person complained of had exercised ordinary care (BANKES, L.J.).

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, as I understand it, is this: Where you have a subject-matter entirely under the control of one party, & something happens while it is under the control of that party, which would not in the ordinary course of things happen without negligence you may presume negligence from the mere fact that it happens, because such a thing could not happen without negligence. There is the case where a cask tumbled out of the door of a warehouse on to a passer by, & it was said against deft.: you are in sole control of this warehouse, & in the ordinary course of things casks do not tumble out of warehouses on to the heads of passers by unless somebody has been careless. If nothing else is proved about how this cask tumbled out, res ipsa loquitur, the jury are entitled to find that it tumbled out by negligence, that being the more probable way in which it happened (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—BRITANNIA HYGIENIC LAUNDRY CO. v. THORNYCROFT (JOHN I.) & CO. 596. Sparks from railway engine.]—In an action for negligently setting fire to a barn by a spark from a locomotive engine, evidence is admissible that other engines of the co. emitted sparks which flew to a distance, in order to show the possibility of the fire having been caused by such a spark.

The fact of a fire having been caused by a spark from a steam engine is primâ facie evidence of negligence in the owner of the engine.—PIGGOT v. EASTERN COUNTIES RY. CO. (1846), 3 C. B. 229; 15 L. J. C. P. 235; 7 L. T. O. S. 209; 10 Jur. 571; 136 E. R. 92.

598. Loss of money—Entrusted to bank clerk.—Deft. entered into a bond, as surety, for the due & faithful performance by one C. of his duty as clerk to a provincial bank. C. being sent by the manager of the bank, at the request of a customer, to his residence, about eleven miles distant from the bank, for the purpose of receiving a large sum of money to be placed to his account, a considerable portion of it being in gold & silver, on his way back dropped the money from his pocket, & lost it:—Held: the loss of the money was primâ facie evidence of gross negligence on the part of C.—MELVILLE v. DOIDGE (1848), 6 C. 599. Contamination of water by products of gas manufacture.]—By a local Act, a co. was incorporated for the purpose of supplying Birmingham with gas; & by a further local Act, s. 160, it was enacted that "if the co. shall at any time cause or suffer to be conveyed or to flow into any stream, pond, or place of water within the limits of the said Act, any washing, substance, or thing which shall be produced by making or supplying gas," they shall forfeit £200. In 1854 the co. erected a gas tank about forty five yards from pltf.'s well. The site was selected in 1852 by an experienced mining engineer on behalf of the co. as a fit & proper site, & the land was in that year accordingly purchased for the purpose; & during 1853 & 1854 the tank was erected on the solid sandstone, with proper material, & in a proper manner in all respects with reference to ordinary circumstances. The co. knew that the mines in the neighbourhood had been worked, but they did not know that the mines had been worked near any part of their land. In 1838 there were workings under half the co.'s land; & from 1848 to 1855 these workings were brought to within sixty yards of the tank, in consequence of which the floor of the tank cracked, & the washings in it flowed out & percolated to pltf.'s well, thereby rendering the water unfit for domestic purposes:—Held: the co. had suffered the washings to flow

The co. have not exonerated themselves from the presumption that the contamination was the esult of negligence on the part of defts. in their vorks. Primâ facie, it was the result of negligence. t was for the co. to purge themselves from the primâ facie presumption of negligence. But if here was negligence, they may properly be said o have suffered that which was occasioned by the construction of their works. The presumption of law is, that the mischief was occasioned by negligence. The works were of a description which must always be attended with danger; & defts. constructed them with due care with reference to ordinary circumstances. But here the circumstances were of an extraordinary nature, on account of the excavations in the neighbourhood; defts. do not show that they might not have constructed the tank in a different manner, whereby the mischief might have been avoided (COCKBURN, C.J.).—HIPKINS v. BIRMINGHAM & STAFFORDSHIRE GAS LIGHT CO. No special negligence in constructing the piers, or in omitting to keep them in proper repair, was imputed to defts. On a subsequent examination of the pier, from which the brick had become detached, the pltf. found that the bricks had become loose at one part, & there was an orifice in which the brick that had caused the injury fitted, & that several other bricks had also fallen out at the same place & left an orifice. No evidence to account for this loosening was adduced on the part of defts., & it did not appear that the existence of the decay had been brought to their knowledge or was the consequence of their omitting to keep the piers properly repaired, but it appeared from pltf.'s evidence that, just prior to the accident happening, a train had passed over the bridge which might have so shaken the piers as to cause the bricks to become loose:—Held: the happening of the occurrence supplied primâ facie evidence of negligence, which, being unrebutted by defts., was sufficient to support the verdict found for pltf.—KEARNEY v. LONDON & BRIGHTON RY. 607. ——.]—Pursuer was driving two cows carefully along a road on a winter evening. The road was imperfectly lighted, but it was possible to see a fair distance. A tramcar belonging to defenders was being driven along the road. The driver did not see the man with the cows, & if he had seen them would have been driving more slowly. The first thing that the driver saw was the head & shoulders of a cow close to the car. He put on his brake, but the car hit & grazed the cow, & before the car stopped, about three yards further on, the driver felt a bump. The driver then got down & found the pursuer unconscious on the near side of the car. In an action for personal injuries pursuer alleged that he had been knocked down by the car owing to the negligence of the driver in not keeping a good look out, & was thereby rendered insensible & suffered from concussion, in consequence of which he had no recollection of the circumstances immediately preceding the accident. Defenders did not dispute the alleged negligence, but they contended that pursuer had failed to prove that the car struck him at all or that if it did this was due to the alleged negligence. There was no evidence by any person who actually saw the accident, but the judge at the trial found that the true inference was that pursuer was knocked down by the car owing to the driver's not keeping a proper look out, & he awarded the pursuer damages :—Held: the facts supported the judge's inference & pursuer was entitled to recover.—CRAIG v. GLASGOW CORPN. Evidence was given that the tackle was improper, not being fitted with a safe hook, & that a jiddy should have been used. Pltf. worked with the hook making no complaint of it. A jiddy had been provided by the master, who had directed that it should be used when earth was raised. Pltf., in his master's presence, had complained that the jiddy was not used for water. The master was at the workings several times each day :—Held: the master was not liable, because, assuming the injury to have arisen from the defect of the hook, the workman himself voluntarily used it, & it was not shown that the injury was not caused by his own rashness, & assuming it to have arisen from the neglect to use the jiddy, the master, having provided a proper apparatus, was not liable for the neglect of pltf.'s fellow workmen in omitting to use it.—GRIFFITHS v. GIDLOW (1858), 3 H. & N. 648; 27 L. A leakage from the cistern having been noticed by pltf. he informed deft., who instructed a competent plumber to remedy it. In consequence of the negligence of the plumber an overflow occurred, which damaged pltf.'s goods:—Held: deft. was not liable, since pltf. had assented to the water being on the premises & therefore deft. by instructing a competent plumber to remedy the leakage had discharged his duty to pltf.—BLAKE v. WOOLF, [1898] 2 Q. Pltf., in giving evidence against defts. in an action for negligence on the ground that there was no such guard or "sword" said that he knew the saw was dangerous, & that it would be less dangerous if guarded, but he had never suggested to the instructor that it should be guarded.

The judgment of a county ct. judge in favour of pltf. was set aside on the ground that he seemed to have thought that as there was a mode of protecting this saw & defts. had not adopted it, they were guilty of negligence.

He ought to have ascertained whether the method of guarding the front of the saw that had been suggested was such a regular & well-recognised method of working circular saws that defts. ought to have employed it. Further, the ct. held that the maxim volenti non fit injuria applied.

Accordingly judgment was entered for defts.—SMERKINICH v. NEWPORT CORPN. (1912), 76 J. P. 454; 10 L. G. R. 959, D. C.

The house was entered by a front door on the ground floor level which was approached from the street by a flight of six or seven steps, these steps being protected on each side by a coping about 8 inches high. On either side of the steps was an area. The steps remained in deft.'s possession & control. Pltf., the wife of one of the tenants occupying the house, slipped on the steps & fell into the area, sustaining considerable injuries. In an action by pltf. against deft., claiming damages in respect of those injuries, the jury found that the defect in the steps in consequence of which the accident occurred consisted not in any disrepair of the steps themselves, but in the absence of a railing; that this defect was due to the negligence of deft.; & that both pltf. & the deft. knew before the accident of the existence of the defect:—Held: the only obligation upon deft. in reference to the approach to the house was to avoid exposing pltf. to any unexpected danger without giving her warning; as the danger was patent to every one, & pltf. in fact knew of it, she had voluntarily taken upon herself to bear the risk; &, therefore, she had established no cause of action.—LUCY v. BAWDEN, [1914] 2 K. 630. Whether mere knowledge sufficient — Plaintiff acting on orders of employer.]—In an action for damage occasioned by deft.'s negligence, a material question is, whether or not pltf. might have escaped the damage by ordinary care on his own part. But deft. is not excused merely because pltf. knew that some danger existed through deft.'s neglect, & voluntarily incurred such danger. The amount of danger, & the circumstances which led pltf. to incur it, are for the consideration of the jury. Therefore, where comrs. of sewers had made a dangerous trench in the only outlet from a news, putting up no fence, & leaving only a narrow passage on which they heaped rubbish; & a cabman, in the exercise of his calling, attempted to lead his horse out over the rubbish, & the horse fell & was killed, for which loss he brought an action:—Held: pltf. was not disentitled to recover because he had at some hazard, created by defts., brought his horse out of the stable; & the case was properly left to the jury on the question whether or not pltf. had persisted, contrary to express warning at the time, as to which there was contradictory evidence, in running upon a great & obvious danger.—CLAYARDS v. DETHICK & DAVIS (1848), 12 Q. Defts.' work was of such nature as to be dangerous to persons working below, unless proper precautions were taken for their safety. Pltf. was aware of the danger. Pltf. while working where he was directed by his employer was injured by a piece of iron dropped by defts.' workmen & brought an action to recover damages for the injury. The jury found that defts. had been guilty of negligence in not taking proper precautions for those below, that there was no contributory negligence on the part of pltf. & that pltf. did not voluntarily incur the risk:—Held: the case was rightly left to the jury, although pltf. was aware of the danger, yet as he was compelled by the orders of his employer to work where he was working when the accident happened, the maxim "volenti non fit injuria" did not apply & he was entitled to recover.—THRUSSELL v. HANDYSIDE (1888), 20 Q. 632. ——.]—It seems to me that the law is now settled that the mere fact of a workman undertaking that which he knows to be dangerous is not of itself conclusive proof that he has brought himself within the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria. It must depend in each case upon the nature of the risk to the workman in connection with it, as well as upon considerations which must vary according to the circumstances of each case (A. L. SMITH, J.).—GREENHALGH v. CWMAMAN COAL CO. (1891), 8 T. L. R. 31, D. C.

633. ——.]—When a workman engaged in an employment not in itself dangerous is exposed to danger arising from an operation in another department over which he has no control, the danger being created or enhanced by the negligence of the employer, the mere fact that he undertakes or continues in such employment with full knowledge & understanding of the danger is not conclusive to show that he has undertaken the risk so as to make the maxim volenti non fit iniuria applicable in case of injury. The question whether he has so undertaken the risk is one of fact & not of law; & this is so both at common law & in cases arising under Employers Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42).

Pltf. was employed by railway contractors to drill holes in a rock cutting near a crane worked by men in the employ of the contractors. The crane lifted stones & at times swung them over pltf.'s head without warning. Pltf. was fully aware of the danger to which he was exposed by thus working near the crane without any warning being given, & had been thus employed for months. A stone having fallen from the crane & injured pltf., he sued his employers in the county ct. under Employers Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42). The jury found (a) that the machinery for lifting the stone, taken as a whole, was not reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was applied; (b) that the omission to supply special means of warning was a defect in the ways, works, machinery & plant; (c) that the employers, or some person engaged by them to look after the condition of the works, etc., were guilty of negligence in not remedying the defect; (d) that pltf. was not guilty of contributory negligence; (e) that he did not voluntarily undertake a risky employment with a knowledge of its risks; & returned a verdict for pltf. for damages. Application having been made to enter judgment for defts. on the ground that the case ought not to have gone to the jury, pltf. having admitted that he knew of the risk & voluntarily incurred it:—Held: the mere fact that pltf. undertook & continued in the employment with full knowledge & understanding of the danger arising from the systematic neglect to give warning did not preclude him from recovering; the evidence would justify a finding that pltf. did not voluntarily undertake the risk of injury; the maxim "volenti non fit injuria" did not apply; & the action was maintainable.—SMITH v. BAKER & SONS, [1891] A. The horse in question was in the shafts of a wagon, & with another horse, a leader, was drawing a load of three tons of manure along a lane in defts.' district. When the wagon had gone some distance along the lane it came to a stretch of road, where, for about 130 feet, 5 inches of granite stones had been laid down by defts. over the whole width of the road. On part of this stretch of road the stones had been rolled in by a steam roller then at work; another part had been partially rolled in; & a third part had not been rolled at all. Pltf.'s wagoner did not ask for help from the men with the steam roller, but put his horses to the task & they had succeeded in drawing the wagon clear of the stones when the horse in the shafts fell down & died from a ruptured blood-vessel. The wagon could not have been turned in the lane & there was no warning notice put up by defts. at the commencement of the lane. At the trial the jury found that there was negligence on the part of defts.' servants; that the driver could not by taking reasonable care have avoided the consequences of defts.' negligence; & that the death of pltf.'s horse was the natural & necessary consequence of defts.' negligence:—Held: there was some evidence to justify the finding of the jury that there was negligence on the part of defts., but having regard to the fact that when the driver came to the part of the road where the granite had been laid down he had an opportunity of seeing & appreciating the risk of danger to the horses, it must be taken that he elected to run the risk, & therefore pltf. was not entitled to claim damages from defts.—TORRANCE v. ILFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1909), 73 J. In consequence of the defect B. was obliged to step upon the "bed" or plate of the machine, to adjust part of it, & whilst doing so, received injuries.

In an action to recover compensation for such injuries the county ct. judge nonsuited pltf. because he continued to work a machine which he knew to be in a defective condition:—Held: pltf.'s knowledge of the defect did not amount to that thorough comprehension of the risk incurred which alone would have justified the withdrawal of the case from the jury.—BROOKE v. RAMSDEN (1890), 63 L. SECT. 4.—IMMINENT RISK.

654. Defendant faced with two risks—Choice of lesser risk.]—Defts., being about to launch a steamship which they had built in their shipbuilding yard on the Mersey, arranged with the owners of a buoy which was thought to be in the line of the launch for its removal. The buoy was removed, but its mooring chains were left unmarked at the bottom of the river. Pltfs.' ketch, which was sailing up the river on the flood tide on the morning of the intended launch, finding the wind falling light, let go her starboard anchor & drifted up the river dragging her anchor, which fouled the mooring chains. The master being unable to free the anchor, defts. sent messages to him warning him that his ketch was in a dangerous position & advising him to slip his anchor & clear away, but the master refused to slip unless defts. would make themselves answerable for the anchor. Defts., deeming it dangerous to life & property to postpone the launch & believing the risk of a collision with the ketch to be slight, launched the steamship, & a collision occurred. In an action of damage by collision brought by the owners of the ketch :—Held : the ketch acted unreasonably in refusing to slip her anchor & was alone to blame, inasmuch as defts., in the dilemma in which they were placed by the action of the ketch, rightly chose the lesser of two risks.—KETCH FRANCES (OWNERS) v. HIGHLAND LOCH (OWNERS), THE HIGHLAND LOCH, [1912] A. 657. —— Work necessarily dangerous.]—Deft. was the occupier of a close adjoining a close occupied by pltf. Deft.'s close was woodland, & he sold the fallage of the timber to H., continuing himself to occupy the close. H. felled a tree in a negligent manner, so that it fell over the fence between the two closes, & made a gap in it. Two cows of pltf. soon afterwards got from pltf.'s close through the gap into deft.'s close, & fed on the leaves of a yew tree which had been felled there by H., & died in consequence. Deft. had had no notice of the fence having been broken down before the escape of pltf.'s cows. There was evidence that deft. & his predecessors had for more than forty years repaired the fence, which was on his land, between the two closes whenever repairs were necessary; & for the last nineteen years the fence had been repaired by deft. & his predecessors upon notice by the occupier for the time being of pltf.'s close. Whenever the fence was so repaired it was for the purpose of preventing cattle on pltf.'s close from escaping into deft.'s close:—Held: the evidence showed a prescriptive obligation on the part of deft. to maintain the fence so as to keep in the cattle in pltf.'s close; the obligation was absolute to keep up a sufficient fence at all times, the act of God or vis major only excepted, without any notice of want of repair; the damage was not too remote; & deft. was therefore liable to pltf. for the loss of the cows.—LAWRENCE v. JENKINS (1873), L. 660. —— —— Building near highway.]—By an agreement between a railway co. & a firm of contractors the latter were to build a superstructure over the railway co.'s station, & were to have a ninety-nine years' lease of same. The new building, which adjoined a public street, required scaffolding & hoardings, which the contractors were to erect in such a way as should be reasonably approved by the railway co. A gantry was also necessary by means of which building materials might be raised to the top of the existing building, & this gantry could only be erected in a particular manner as provided by the agreement. During the progress of the building operations pltf., while walking on the pavement outside the station, was injured by some timber falling on her from the building, & in respect of her injuries she sued both the railway co. & the contractors. Neither of defts. called any evidence as to how the timber fell. The jury found that the accident was caused by negligence, as there was not sufficient protection to the public on the footpath, & the judge gave judgment against both defts.:—Held: the agreement created no relationship of principal & agent, the railway co. were mere reversioners, the fact of their having a right to approve plans did not make them responsible for the gantry being defective, & therefore they were not liable for damages.—HURLSTONE v. LONDON ELECTRIC RY. In laying down one of the sewers in a highway, the contractor at three different places came across the gas main, the property of the gas co. The sewer trench was dug to a lower depth. The contractor was directed by the engineers of the district council to support the gas main by nine-inch brick piers in places where the gas main was met with. This was done. Subsequently, the gas main was found fractured at two of the places where it was met with. The gas co. sued the district council for negligence & obtained a verdict. The district council claimed to be indemnified under their contract with the contractor. In the issue between the distric council & the contractor, the jury found in favour of the contractor that the damage was not due to the mode in which the work was done :—Held : the third party was not liable to indemnify the district council.—ILFORD GAS CO. v. ILFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1903), 67 J. 665. —— ——.]—The corpn. of a borough were the owners of a tramway in the borough, & they granted a lease of the tramways, of which lease pltfs. were the assignees. Under the lease the repairs necessary to keep the tramway in working order were to be executed by the corpn. at the cost of pltfs. During the currency of the lease the tramway required to be relaid at a certain place & an agreement was entered into between the corpn. & pltfs. which after reciting that the corpn. at the request & with the consent of pltfs. had agreed to relay the tramway, provided that the corpn. would relay the tramway, & would during the execution of the work provide where necessary a temporary track for the purpose of enabling pltfs., as far as possible, to maintain their service of trams, & the agreement further provided that nothing therein contained should render the corpn. liable in the event of any accident, injury, or damage being occasioned by or sustained by pltfs., their servants or passengers or their rolling stock through or arising out of the execution by the corpn. of the work, but that the corpn. would insert in the contract to be entered into by them a provision imposing upon the contractor full responsibility for all claims & demands resulting from any such accident, injury or damage. The corpn. thereupon made a contract with deft., to which pltfs. were not parties, which recited the lease & that the corpn. had at the request & with the consent of pltfs. subject to certain conditions, agreed to relay the tramway, & by which deft. agreed to execute the work of relaying the tramway, & to indemnify the corpn. against all actions & claims for compensation to workmen & passengers carried on the tramway arising out of the execution of the work, & that deft. should during the execution of the work, be responsible for all accidents. During the execution of the work the tramcars continued to run & a car which was carrying passengers was derailed & overturned owing to the negligent manner in which certain of the work was being carried out at the place where the accident happened, & the passengers & driver were injured & the tramcar was damaged. Pltfs. paid compensation to the passengers & driver, & claimed to recover from deft. the amounts so paid & the cost of repairing the tramcar :—Held : though pltfs. were not parties to the contract between the corpn. & deft. yet inasmuch as pltfs.' proprietary right as lessees of the tramway & their right of passage on the highway had been injuriously affected by the act of deft., the latter was liable in damages to pltfs. ; & as the work of relaying the tramway while the tramcars were running involved risk of danger to the passengers in the tramcars, pltfs. were liable to their passengers & were entitled to recover from deft. the sum properly paid as compensation to the passengers who were injured as well as the sum paid as compensation to the driver & the cost of repairing the tramcar.—BIRMINGHAM TRAMWAYS CO., LTD. v. LAW, [1910] 2 K. A person having fallen into this excavation & sustained injuries from which he died, his widow & daughter sued the contractor & district council under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), claiming damages. The jury returned a verdict for pltfs. The district council thereupon claimed that under the terms of the contract between them & the contractor, they were entitled to an indemnity from him :—Held : it was not against public policy that the district council should take an indemnity from the contractor & be allowed to enforce it against him, & therefore a declaration should be made that they were entitled to such indemnity, which should include the costs of the action.—NEWCOMBE v. YEWEN & CROYDON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL (1913), 29 T. 671. —— No reasonable expectation of occurrence.]—In order that an extraordinary natural event, such as a very high tide, should be, in the legal sense of the words, an act of God, it is not necessary that such an event should never have happened before; it is sufficient that its happening could not have been reasonably expected. If such an event has happened once, but there is nothing to lead to the inference that it is likely to recur, it does not, if it happens a second time, cease to be an act of God.

Where deft. charged with negligence has been guilty of a breach of duty, sufficient to produce the damage complained of, he cannot escape liability by showing that the same damage would have arisen from some other cause beyond his control if he had done his duty. But if he can show that some of the damage which actually happened arose from a cause beyond his control, the liability for damage will be apportioned.—NITRO-PHOSPHATE & ODAM'S CHEMICAL MANURE CO. v. LONDON & ST. 672. —— ——.]—Defts., the Corpn. of Halifax, had under statutory powers constructed a road on the slope of a hill which acted as a "catchwater" for rain-water & loose shale from the upper slopes. To provide for the rain-water & shale from above, which would be intercepted by the new road, a channel with large gullies or catchpits, which would hold shale & allow water to escape, was formed. On July 1, 1914, a phenomenal storm of rain, or cloud-burst, descended upon the hill & road, & thence in a torrent of water & shale into the valley beneath, where pltfs.' wool spinning mill was situated, & damaged their goods. In an action they claimed damages for defts.' negligence in the construction of the works & their maintenance. They complained that there was insufficient provision of gullies or catchpits for water in the channel & that the sewers with which it was connected were of insufficient capacity to carry off storm-water:—Held: the natural & obvious effect of making such a road was that it acted as a "catchwater" defts. did not act reasonably & take proper care in exercising their statutory powers in constructing it; they were guilty of negligence & the doctrine of non-liability for nonfeasance had no application; where liability arose from negligence only it became unnecessary to consider whether it was subject to an exception in respect of damage caused by the act of God: the rainfall, though so heavy & unusual, fell short of amounting to an act of God, ordinarily defined as such an operation of the forces of nature as reasonable foresight could not provide against.—BALDWIN'S LTD. v. HALIFAX CORPN. 673. Inevitable accident—Impossibility of prevention—By exercise of ordinary care & skill.]—A vessel doing damage cannot plead "inevitable accident" if, in a dark or hazy night, she carries much sail, & goes at great speed, neglecting measures of precaution that would have rendered the accident less probable.

An inevitable accident is this: that which the party charged with the offence could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, & maritime skill. It is not inevitable accident if a vessel is going eight or nine miles an hour when she ought to be sailing three or four, & say: "I could not prevent the accident at the moment it occurred" (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE VIRGIL (1843), 2 Wm. Rob. 201; 2 Notes of Cases, 499; 5 L. T. 122; 7 Jur. 1174; 166 E. R. 730.

A party, in such a case, cannot plead inevitable accident, but is liable for the consequences which, by possibility, he might have prevented. Inevitable accident is that which no skill & no vigilance could possibly have avoided.—THE MELLONA (1847), 3 Wm. Rob. 7; 5 Notes of Cases, 450; 9 L. T. O. S. 474; 11 Jur. 783; 166 E. R. 865.

Where the defence of inevitable accident is set up on behalf of a vessel primâ facie to blame for a collision, the defence, to succeed, must be supported by proof that everything was done which could & ought to have been done to avoid the collision; & this, though the vessel be in some degree disabled, & so less manageable than she would otherwise have been.—THE CALCUTTA (OWNERS) v. THE EMMA (OWNERS), THE CALCUTTA (1869), 21 L. 678. —— —— ——.]—Inevitable accident is that which the party charged with the damage could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, & maritime skill.

Two sailing vessels approaching stem on in such a manner as that, under the Sailing Rules, each would be bound to port, being in a dense fog, only sighted each other at a distance of about 200 yards. Defts.' vessel, having been close hauled on the port tack, was then preparing to go about, & had eased off her head sheets. Both vessels immediately ported, but came into collision. Only one minute elapsed between the time of sighting & the collision. Pltfs.' petition alleged, that defts.' vessel neglected to port, & it was stated, in answer to a question by the judge of the Admlty. Ct., that the head sheets of defts.' vessel were not again hauled aft. On this evidence that vessel was held to blame by the Admlty. Ct., on the ground that she had not executed all the proper manœuvres which she might have executed after sighting the other vessel:—Held: the collision was the result of an inevitable accident, defts.' vessel having done all that could be effected by ordinary care, caution, or maritime skill in the short space of time that elapsed.—THE MARPESIA (1872), L. On the brig striking the steamer the ring of one of the buoys carried away, & the steamer got adrift, & drove down the river, & ultimately came in contact with & did damage to a barque, whose owners instituted a cause of damage against the steamer in the county ct. of Northumberland, to recover for the damage done to their vessel by the steamer.

At the hearing it was proved that the chain cables of the steamer had been unbent at the time she got adrift, & that no look-out had previously been kept on deck, though it was known that the weather was getting worse:—Held: a defence of inevitable accident, set up by the owners of the steamer, was not sustained, & the steamer was

Had an anchor been let go, the collision would probably have been averted, at all events, the master would have done all that was possible in the circumstances, & have rendered the accident, to use the words of DR. LUSHINGTON, "less probable" (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE PLADDA (1876), 2 P. D. 34; 46 L. J. P. 61.

680. —— —— ——.]—Inevitable accident is that which the party sought to be charged could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, & maritime skill.

A person relying on inevitable accident must show that something happened over which he had no control, & the effect of which he could not have avoided by the exercise of the greatest care & skill. It is not sufficient for him merely to show that he was not negligent (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—THE SCHWAN, THE ALBANO, [1892] P. 419; 69 L. T. 34; 8 T. L. R. 425; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 347, C. A.

681. —— —— ——.]—In an action of damage by collision, it appeared that pltfs.' vessel was at anchor in the Mersey when defts.' steamer ran into her in broad daylight. The defence was that the steam steering gear of defts.' vessel failed to act in consequence of some latent defect, or obstruction, which could not have been ascertained or prevented by the exercise of any reasonable care or skill on the part of defts., & that the collision & damage were caused by inevitable accident. The steam steering gear in question was good of its kind; it had never previously failed to act, & the cause of the defect in the machine, or of the obstruction in the working, could not be discovered by competent persons. Part of the gear, including some portion of the chain, running between the wheel & the rudder, had been recently renewed, & it was admitted that new chain is liable to stretch, but it was proved that before the vessel left her anchorage to proceed on her voyage, the whole of the gear had been tested & found in good order, & that the chain had been tightened up as occasion seemed to require:—Held: defts. were liable, as they had not satisfied the burden of proof, for, in order to support the defence of inevitable accident, & disprove the primâ facie evidence of negligence, it was necessary for them to show that the cause of the accident was one not produced by them, & the result of which they could not avoid, but defts. knew of the tendency of new chain to stretch, & therefore that an accumulation of links at the leading wheels might possibly cause jamming, &, considering the crowded condition of the river where the accident occurred, the use, or readiness for immediate use, of hand, instead of steam, steering gear, was a means by which the result could have been avoided.

Defts. had failed to sustain the plea of inevitable accident, as it was necessary for them either to show what was the cause of the accident, & that though exercising ordinary care, caution & maritime skill, the result of that cause was unavoidable, or to enumerate all the possible causes, one or other of which might have produced the effect, & show with regard to every one, that the

695. —— ——.] —Deft. was the owner of a series of artificial lakes, which had existed for a long time without causing damage. Upon a most unusual rainfall occurring, the bank at the end of the higher lake gave way & the water rushing with great violence into the lakes below caused their banks also to give way, & the aggregate volume of water from the lakes rushing down the valley, caused damage to certain county bridges lower down the stream. On the trial of an action by pltf., the surveyor of the county, against deft. to recover for the damage done to the bridges, the jury found that there had been no negligence in the construction or the maintenance of the lakes, but that if the flood had been anticipated, the effect might have been prevented:—Held: the rainfall being so unusual as to amount to "vis major" or the act of God, deft. was not liable.—NICHOLS v. MARSLAND (1876), 2 Ex. 696. —— ——.]—It was stated for the opinion of the ct. by an official referee that upon the occasion of an universal rainfall, unprecedented in duration & quantity for many years in the district, there was imminent peril of defts.' canal bursting; & defts., in order to prevent it, raised a sluice by which a large quantity of water escaped into a neighbouring brook, & thence into a colliery. The water, having filled up this colliery, flowed into some collieries of pltfs. & destroyed their works. It was found that, if relief had not been afforded to the canal banks at this time, an inundation must have very shortly ensued, which would have equally destroyed pltfs.' works & also caused far greater devastation to property & probably loss of life throughout a very wide area; that the course adopted by defts. was prudent & proper, & the only effectual measure which was possible in the emergency. Pltfs. claimed in this action alternatively damage for defts.' wrongful acts, or compensation under defts.' Acts of Parliament which provided for satisfaction to be made for injury or damage alleged to be sustained by reason of carrying into effect any of the provisions of that Act:—Held: pltfs.' injury was by the finding due not to defts.' wrongful acts nor to the effect of any of the provisions of defts.' Acts of Parliament, but to vis major or an act of God, &, as in any event pltfs.' works would have been equally destroyed, the immediate damage caused by defts.' own act in raising the sluice was injuria absque damno & irrecoverable.—THOMAS v. BIRMINGHAM CANAL CO. 697. —— ——.]—The Victoria Dock co., a co. incorporated by Act of Parliament, in pursuance of their powers, in 1858 demised a portion of their dock wall, or bank, to the Thames Graving Dock co., the lessees covenanting to construct a graving dock on land of their own, & make & at all times maintain a channel through the demised part of the wall into such graving dock. The Graving Dock co. constructed their dock & the channel in accordance with the covenants in the lease. The undertaking of the Thames Graving Dock co. was afterwards acquired by the Victoria Graving Dock co. The Victoria Docks co. was afterwards amalgamated with the London & St. Katherine's Dock co. On Jan. 18, 1881, there was an unusually high tide & a strong gale, which was at its height at the highest point of the tide. The high tide & gale combined forced the water in the graving dock, which had entered it through the channel demised by the said lease, over the banks & flooded pltf.'s land. Pltf. sued both cos. for damages. The ct. came to the conclusion, upon the evidence, that the banks of the graving dock had not been properly maintained at the height required by the Dagenham comrs. who are the comrs. of sewers for the district:—Held: neither the height of the tide nor the force of the wind, nor the coincidence of their happening together, could be considered as the act of God in the sense which would discharge the Graving Dock co. from liability; the St. Katherine's Dock co., being under a liability to maintain their own wall, & having leased it with a covenant which bound the lessees to make an opening in it, were in the same position as if it had been cut by a contractor employed by them, & were liable for any damage resulting from their lessees' neglect in taking proper precautions against the natural results of such opening.

I have come to the conclusion that there was in every way want of care which destroys any protection or excuse by the act of God, & a want of care which at common law would certainly render the Graving Dock co. liable. I think the St. Katherine's Dock co. are liable, because they had the duty imposed upon them of maintaining the wall round the entrance to the lift cut, & if they cut away that wall they were bound to substitute another (FIELD, J.).—BURT v. VICTORIA GRAVING DOCK CO., LTD. & LONDON & ST. A municipal authority, in laying out a park, constructed a concrete paddling pond for children in the bed of a stream & altered the course of the stream & obstructed the natural flow of water therefrom. Owing to a rainfall of extraordinary violence the stream overflowed at the pond, &, as the result of the operations of the authority, a great volume of water, which would have been carried off by the stream in its natural course without mischief, poured down a public street into the town & damaged the property of two railway companies:—Held: the extraordinary rainfall was not a damnum fatale which absolved the authority from responsibility, & they were liable in damages to the railway cos.—GREENOCK CORPN. v. CALEDONIAN RY. 701. —— Where injury would have been caused by ordinary occurrences.]—Pltf.'s premises were flooded by an escape of water laterally from one of deft.'s pipes, arising from the starting of a fire-plug, in consequence of a severe frost. By reason of an accumulation of frozen mud on the top of the plug, the water was unable to force the plug out & thus escape, in which case no damage would have resulted. Evidence was given that the plugs were known to start occasionally under such circumstances, & that the lateral escape of water might be prevented at a moderate expense: —Held: there was evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of defts.—STEGGLES v. NEW RIVER CO. 705. ——.]—If a duty is cast upon an individual by common law. the act of God will excuse him from the performance of that duty. No man is compelled to do that which is impossible. It is a duty of a carrier to deliver safely the goods entrusted to his care; but if in carrying them with proper care they are destroyed by lightning or swept away by a flood. he is excused, because the safe delivery has by the act of God become impossible. If, however, a man contracts that he will be liable for the damage occasioned by a particular state of circumstances or if an Act of Parliament declares that a man shall be liable for the damage occasioned by a particular state of circumstances, I know of no reason why a man should not be liable for the damage occasioned by that state of circumstances, whether the state of circumstances is brought about by the act of man or by the act of God. 717. —— —— Representation by contractor.]—Pltf., a workman, among others in defts.' employ, was injured by the fall of a wall. The foreman of the works had observed that the wall was unsafe, &, having placed the workmen out of danger, ordered a contractor employed in repairing the buildings at the time to bring his whole staff of workmen & shore up the wall. This was done, & the foreman, having been assured by the contractor that the wall was safe, sent the workmen back to their work. Shortly afterwards the wall fell. The foreman trusted to the assurance of the builder that the wall was safe, & did not personally inspect its condition after it had been shored up:—Held: there was no evidence of negligence on the part of defts. or of their foreman.—MOORE v. GIMSON (1889), 58 L. nurses, for whose services they made charges to persons on whose application the nurses were supplied. The assocn. issued printed rules & regulations with regard to the duties of their nurses & other matters with a view as well to the protection of the nurses as to ensuring their efficiency while engaged in nursing. These regulations provided for the exercise of certain supervision over the nurses by a superintendent appointed by the assocn.; but, with regard to the work of a nurse while engaged in nursing a patient, it was provided (inter alia) that, while so engaged, she should not absent herself from duty without the permission of the patient's friends, & that she should implicitly follow the instructions of the patient's medical man. A form, which was sent out by the assocn. upon supplying nurses, indicated to the person applying for the nurse that, while engaged in nursing the patient, the nurse was to be regarded as employed by that person. Two nurses were supplied by the assocn. for the purpose of nursing the female pltf. through an operation which was about to be performed upon her by a medical man in attendance upon her. An injury was occasioned to the female pltf., through the negligence of the nurses, or one of them, while engaged in nursing her:—Held: upon the true construction of the documents in relation to the supply of the nurses, the contract of the assocn. was, not to nurse the female pltf. through the agency of the nurses as their servants, but merely to procure for her duly qualified nurses, & that the nurses were not, in nursing the female pltf., acting as the servants of the assocn.; & therefore defts. were not liable in respect of negligence of the nurses supplied by them.—HALL v. LEES, [1904] 2 K. 719. —— —— Local authority providing medical attention.]—Defts. a local authority, acting under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), provided for the use of the inhabitants of their district a hospital for the reception of persons suffering from infectious diseases. A visiting physician, who was a competent medical practitioner, was appointed to the hospital, & acted under the general directions of the hospitals committee of defts., the rules providing (inter alia) that he should be responsible for "the treatment of the patients from the beginning to the end of their stay, & also for their freedom from infection when discharged." A son of pltf. was treated in the hospital while suffering from a mild attack of scarlet fever, & was ultimately discharged by the visiting physician while still in an infectious condition, & under circumstances which a jury found to amount to a want of reasonable skill & care on his part in & about the discharge; after the boy had returned home, he communicated the disease to three other children of pltf. Pltf. then sued defts. to recover the expense to which he had been put in regard to the illness of his other children owing to the premature discharge of his son from the hospital by the visiting physician:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, for the legal obligation of defts. extended only to the provision of reasonably skilled & competent medical attendance for the patients, which they had discharged & there was no absolute undertaking or obligation on their part that no patient should be discharged by the visiting physician while still in a condition which might cause infection.—EVANS v. LIVERPOOL CORPN., [1906] 1 K. The relationship of master & servant does not exist between the governors & the physicians & surgeons who give their services at the hospital & the nurses & other attendants assisting at an operation cease for the time being to be the servants of the governors, inasmuch as they take their orders during that period from the operating surgeon alone & not from the hospital authorities. Pltf. brought an action against the governors of a hospital for damages for injuries alleged to have been caused to him during an operation by the negligence of some members of the hospital staff:—Held: the action was not maintainable.—HILLYER v. ST. 722. Exceptions to rule — Implied representation by person employing contractor.] — Defts., wharfingers, for good consideration agreed to allow the pltf., a shipowner, to discharge his ship at their wharf. To do this it was necessary that the ship should be moored alongside defts.' jetty, which extended into the river Thames, where the ship must necessarily ground at low water. The bed of the river adjoining the jetty was under the control of the Thames Conservators, & defts. had no control over it, but they took no care to ascertain whether it was in a safe condition, so as not to endanger a vessel taking the ground there. Pltf.'s ship, as the tide ebbed, settled down & suffered damage from the uneven nature of the ground:—Held: defts. were liable, for under the circumstances they must be taken to have represented that they had taken reasonable care to ascertain that the bottom of the river at the jetty was in such a condition as not to endanger a vessel using the premises in the ordinary way.—THE MOORCOCK (1889), 14 P. 724. —— ——.]—The harbour at S. saw vested in trustees who own & have the control & management of the harbour & berths therein, one of which is alongside a wharf known as the K. wharf.

The trustees invite vessels to use the harbour & levy tolls on vessels doing so. The K. wharf is owned, controlled, & managed by the L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., who collect dues on all goods loaded or discharged at the wharf. Vessels loading or discharging at the wharf have to take the ground at low water at the berth alongside the wharf. The Trinity House Pilots licenced to pilot vessels into & out of the harbour at S. from time to time take soundings in the harbour for the purpose of being able to perform their duty to the ships who employ them, & in pursuance of the directions given them by the pilotage authority.

The B., a French steamship, was employed to bring a consignment of flour to R. & A., merchants at S., who owned a warehouse on the K. wharf built on land leased from the railway co. The flour which was carried under bills of lading was to be stored in the warehouse, & the railway co. received from R. & A., the consignees of the flour, fees & dues for permission to receive the flour at the wharf. The ship's brokers, who held both the ship's & consignees' bills of lading, expecting the arrival of the B. sent a postcard to the pilots at S. directing them to berth the B. on her arrival at the K. wharf, & this was done. At low water the B. took ground & was injured by grounding on a heap of rubbish lying in the harbour alongside the wharf. Neither the trustees nor the railway co. as wharfingers had ever sounded the berth, each thinking it was the duty of the other to do so, & also because both relied on the soundings made by the pilots whom they thought would tell them if anything was wrong. The owners of the B. sued the trustees & the wharfingers, the railway co., for the damages sustained by them by reason of the defective condition of the berth:—Held: the trustees were liable for the damage caused by the defective berth as they had been guilty of a breach of their statutory duty to remove obstructions for the purpose of preserving the navigation & use of the harbour, & the railway co., as wharfingers, were liable, for there was at least a duty on them to take reasonable care to find out whether the berth was safe, &, in the event of the state of the berth being unknown to them, there was a duty on them to warn the B. that they did not know what condition the berth was in.—THE BEARN, [1906] P. 48; 75 L. SUB-SECT. 1.—PLAINTIFF'S NEGLIGENCE MUST BE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY.

726. General rule.]—In an action to recover damages for an injury occasioned by a collision between two vessels:—Held: the proper question for the jury was whether the damage was occasioned entirely by the negligence or improper conduct of deft. or whether pltf. himself so far contributed to the misfortune by his own negligence or want of ordinary & common care & caution, that, but for such negligence or want of ordinary care & caution on his part, the misfortune would not have happened; in the first case, pltf. would be entitled to recover, in the latter not, as, but for his own fault, the misfortune could not have happened. Negligence or want of ordinary care or caution will not, however, disentitle pltf. to recover, unless it be such, that, but for that negligence or want of ordinary care & caution the misfortune could not have happened; nor if deft. might by the exercise of care on his part have avoided the consequences of the neglect or carelessness of pltf.—TUFF v. WARMAN (1858), 5 C. In an action by resp. against appcts., the judge directed the jury that the question for them was whether defts.' van occasioned the accident, & whether the same was brought about by the negligence of defts.' servant, & that there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of pltf.:—Held: this direction was wrong; there was clear evidence of negligence on the part of pltf., & the judge ought to have left it to the jury to say whether such negligence proximately contributed to the accident; the proper question for a jury in such a case is that stated in the judgment of WIGHTMAN, J., in Tuff v. Warman, No. 726, ante.—LONDON, BRIGHTON & SOUTH COAST RY. returning the empty trucks there. Over this siding was a bridge eight feet high from the ground. On a Saturday afternoon, when all the colliery men had left work, the servants of the railway ran some trucks on the siding. All but one were empty, & that one contained another truck, & their joint height amounted to eleven feet. On the Sunday evening the railway servants brought on the siding many other empty trucks, & pushed forward all those previously left on the siding. Some resistance was felt, the power of the engine pushing the trucks was increased, & the two trucks, the joint height of which amounted to eleven feet, struck the bridge & broke it down. In an action to recover damages for the injury, the defence of contributory negligence was set up. The judge at the trial told the jurors that pltfs. must satisfy them that the accident happened solely through the negligence of defts.' servants, for that if both sides were negligent, so as to contribute to the accident, pltfs. could not recover:—Held: a misdirection, & a new trial ordered.

Pltf. in an action for negligence cannot succeed if it is found by the jury that he has himself been guilty of any negligence or want of ordinary care which contributed to cause the accident. But there is another proposition equally well established, & it is a qualification upon the first, namely, that though pltf. may have been guilty of negligence, & although that negligence may in fact, have contributed to the accident, yet if deft. could in the result by exercise of ordinary care & diligence, have avoided the mischief which happened, pltf.'s negligence will not excuse him (LORD PENZANCE).—RADLEY v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. Where a brig was carrying the anchor in a position contrary to the bye-laws of the River Thames, at the time when she came in collision with a barge :—Held : the improper carrying of the anchor would not of itself be sufficient to make the owner of the brig responsible in damages, if the barge, by departing from the known rule of the river, brought herself into the situation in which the brig struck her, although but for the position of the anchor the collision would not have produced the injury complained of.—SILLS v. BROWN (1840), 9 C. & P. 601, N. 751. ——.] —The general rule of law respecting negligence is, that although there may have been negligence on the part of pltf. yet unless he might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of deft.'s negligence, he is entitled to recover. Therefore, where deft. negligently drove his horses & waggon against & killed an ass, which had been left in the highway fettered in the forefeet, & thus unable to get out of the way of deft.'s waggon, which was going at a smartish pace along the road, it was held, that the jury were properly directed, that although it was an illegal act on the part of pltf. so to put the animal on the highway, pltf. was entitled to recover.—DAVIES v. MANN (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L. 752. ——.] — A gas co. incorporated by Act of Parliament, with the usual powers to take up pavements, etc., for the purpose of laying down & repairing mains, pipes, etc., had for some years supplied gas to a house belonging to pltf.; the only means of shutting it off being by a stop cock within the house, the key of which was kept by the occupier. The last tenant, on quitting, gave notice to the co. that he should not require any further supply; & one of their workmen, at his request, removed a chandelier from one of the rooms, leaving the end of the pipe properly secured. The internal fittings were the property of pltf. Whilst the house remained untenanted, the gas by some unexplained means escaped & an explosion took place, by which the house was considerably damaged. In case against the co., alleging a breach of duty on their part in not taking proper means to prevent the influx of gas into the house, the judge having, upon the above facts, directed a non-suit, the ct. declined to interfere.

756. ——.] — No action will lie for the consequences of a negligent act, where the party complaining has by his own want of due care & caution been in any degree contributory to the misfortune. A swing-bridge over a canal crossing a public highway, when turned back for the passage of a barge along the canal, left a gap on the side of the road without any fence towards the water. A., being upon the bridge whilst it was in this state, & the spot being dark, incautiously stepped back & fell into the water & was drowned. In an action by his widow & administratrix against the canal co., under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), the jury were told that, if they thought there had been negligence on the part of the co., & no want of proper care & caution on the part of deceased, pltf. was entitled to a verdict; but that, if they thought that deceased had by his own negligence contributed to the accident, they must find for defts.:—Held: a proper direction, & upon the facts, the jury were warranted in finding for defts., although they were of opinion that the bridge was not secured as it should have been.

Assuming that the co. were in some degree censurable, the negligence of deceased was the cause, without which the accident would never have happened (ERLE, C.J.).—WITHERLEY v. REGENT'S CANAL CO. (1862), 12 C. B. N. S. 2; 142 E. R. 1041.

759. ——.] — Defts.' railway crossed a public footway on the level. About half-past four o'clock in the afternoon of Mar. 29 pltf., a foot passenger, while crossing from the down side to the up side of the railway, was knocked down & injured at the crossing by a train of defts. on the up line. Owing to the position of certain buildings which stood by the line it was impossible for anyone crossing from the down side to see a train coming until he got within a step or two from the down line, but a person standing on the down line or the six-foot had a clear & uninterrupted view up & down the line for several hundred yards. Pltf., who lived near & was well acquainted with the crossing, stated that before crossing he looked to the right along the down line, but he admitted that he did not look to the left along the up line, & that if he had looked he must have seen the train coming. The engine-driver did not whistle. There was a servant of defts. employed as a gatekeeper at the crossing, whose duty it was to open the carriage gates there when carriages could safely be admitted, & to close them at other times. He was standing at the time on the opposite side of the crossing talking to two boys, with a furled flag in his hand; but he gave no warning to pltf. that a train was coming. Pltf. having brought an action against defts. to recover compensation for his injuries, was nonsuited on the above facts being proved at the trial:—Held: the nonsuit was right as, although there was evidence of negligence on the part of defts., yet according to the undisputed facts of the case pltf. had shown that the accident was solely caused by his omission to use the care which any reasonable man would have used.

It is for pltf. to show that the accident which happened to him was caused by a negligent act of defts., or of those for whose negligent acts defts. are liable & that that accident was produced as between him & defts. solely by defts.' negligence in this sense, that he himself was not guilty of any negligence which contributed to the accident (BRETT, M.R.).—DAVEY v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 763. ——.] — A barque, with a cargo of wheat from San Francisco, put into Falmouth for orders & left that port for Hull in tow under a contract to pay the tug a fixed sum. The tug set the courses without interference from the tow, but the latter regularly took soundings. When nearing the entrance to the Humber the weather became thick &, a sounding indicating shallower water, the master of the barque was about to signal to the tug, when his vessel took the ground, the wind at the time being light & the sea smooth. A second tug then came up, &, as her master would not take less, the master of the barque agreed to pay £500 if she would assist the first tug in an endeavour to tow the vessel off that tide. The efforts of the two tugs proved unsuccessful, & the second tug, having been sent to Grimsby for more tugs, returned with two others, whilst men from the shore assisted the crew in jettisoning some of the cargo. The four tugs then took hold of the vessel & she came off, & was subsequently safely docked at Hull. The owners, masters, & crews of all four tugs claimed salvage. Defts., the owners of ship, cargo, & freight, alleged that the stranding was due to the negligence of the first tug, & counter-claimed against her for the loss of cargo & for any salvage they might have to pay the other salvors. They further submitted that the agreement with the second tug should be set aside as unreasonable & made under duress:—Held: (1) the first tug was responsible for the direction of the course, &, having been negligent in respect of it & in not taking soundings, her claim for salvage must be dismissed; (2) the counterclaim of defts. must also be dismissed, as their master was guilty of contributory negligence in allowing the tug to run on instead of ordering her to haul off when approaching a difficult port in foggy weather.—THE ALTAIR, [1897] P. 105; 66 L. She had steam in her boilers, but was not using it. When she was two-thirds of her length out of the dock & slanting across & down the river the Bogota sighted, some three-quarters of a mile away, the steamship Alconda coming up the river under her own steam with two tugs attached. The Bogota & her tug gave four short blasts, which were repeated, as a warning that the river was blocked, & continued their manœuvre. The Alconda, however, held on her course, & in attempting to pass between the Bogota's tug & the bank, struck the tug while the latter was still about 100 feet from the bank, with the result that the tug was forced back on the Bogota, & all three vessels were damaged :—Held : the Alconda was solely to blame for the collision, first, because in the circumstances the Bogota was not contravening Clyde Navigation Bye-laws, r. XIX ; secondly, because, assuming that the Bogota had contravened the rule, the collision was caused by the subsequent & independent fault of the Alconda in holding on her course & attempting to pass the Bogota after she had been warned that the river was blocked.—ANGLO-NEWFOUNDLAND DEVELOPMENT CO., LTD. v. PACIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO., [1924] A. 787. —— ——.]—Defts. were proprietors of a dock & tidal basin, made under the powers given by an Act of Parliament, & for the use of which they were entitled to receive tolls. In an action by pltfs. to recover compensation for the loss of their ship in passing from the dock, it appeared that the dock & basin were opened on Mar. 3, the channel from the dock to the river T., through the basin, was intended to be 120 feet wide; but at the time of the accident, on Mar. 19, the channel had only been excavated to the width of seventy feet, leaving a bank on either side, which was in course of removal by dredging. At the time when the ship went out of the dock the depth of water indicated on the sill was 24 feet 6 inches; the channel was rather shallower, & the bank on each side rose about 3 feet 6 inches; the ship grounded on one of these. No notice had been publicly given of the state of the bottom of the basin, nor was the channel marked by buoys or otherwise. On Mar. 8, a larger vessel, with the same pilot, had got safely out, & he knew the condition of the basin:—Held: it was the duty of defts. to take reasonable care that their dock & basin were kept so free from obstruction as that those who used them might do so without danger to their lives & property; defts. were guilty of negligence; &, assuming the knowledge of the pilot to be the knowledge of pltfs., pltfs. were entitled to recover, inasmuch as, the obstruction having been caused by the wrongful act of defts., pltfs. were not precluded from recovering for the injury resulting from the negligence of defts., unless the pilot, in attempting to take the ship out of dock, was guilty of a want of common prudence.

Clayards v. Dethick & Davis, No. 630, ante, is a direct authority, that where danger has been created by the wrongful or negligent act of another, if a man, in the performance of a lawful act, voluntarily exposes himself to that danger, he is not precluded from recovering for injury resulting from it, unless the circumstances are such that the jury are of opinion that the exposing himself to that danger was a want of common or ordinary prudence on his part (COCKBURN, C.J.).—THOMPSON v. NORTH EASTERN RY. 790. —— Warning from defendant—Circumstances amounting to warning.]—Where a person who is charged with negligence seeks to discharge himself by showing that there was negligence in pltf., inasmuch as he had warning of the danger, deft. must show that such warning came either from himself, or under circumstances which rendered it the duty of pltf. to act upon it.

Accordingly, in an action for injury done to pltf.'s vessel by the anchor of deft.'s vessel striking her, it appeared that one of the crew of pltf.'s vessel had been informed by one of a third vessel that his, the informant's, vessel was about to leave her then station, because there was an anchor somewhere near her &, this being relied upon to charge pltf.'s party with negligence in not avoiding the danger:—Held: to be no answer to the action.—VENUS v. PEARSON (1830), L. & Welsb. 160; 8 L. 791. General rule.]—A ship has no right, by its own misconduct, to put another ship into a situation of extreme peril, & then charge that other ship with misconduct. My opinion is that if, in that moment of extreme peril & difficulty, such other ship happens to do something wrong, so as to be a contributory to the mischief, that would not render her liable for the damage, inasmuch as perfect presence of mind, accurate judgment, & promptitude under all circumstances are not to be expected. You have no right to expect men to be something more than ordinary men (JAMES, L.J.).

793. ——.]—While pltfs., husband & wife, were in a shop as customers a skylight in the roof of the shop was broken, owing to the negligence of contractors engaged in repairing the roof, & a portion of the glass fell & struck the husband, causing him a severe shock. His wife, who was standing close to him at the time, was not touched by the falling glass, but, reasonably believing her husband to be in danger, she instinctively clutched his arm, & tried to pull him from the spot. In doing this she strained her leg in such a way as to bring about a recurrence of thrombosis. In an action to recover damages from the contractors:—Held: the husband was entitled to damages, & the wife was also entitled to damages, inasmuch as what she did was, in the circumstances, a natural & proper thing to do.

If a person is not to be held guilty of contributory negligence because he, acting instinctively for his own preservation does that which a reasonable man under those conditions would do I cannot see why he should be any more held to be guilty of contributory negligence if he does his instinctive act for the preservation of his wife or child, or even of a friend or stranger (SWIFT, J.).—BRANDON v. OSBORNE, GARRETT & CO., [1924] 1 K. 796. ——.]—A wooden apparatus, technically called a "slide," & used for lowering casks & other heavy & bulky goods from vans in the street into defts.' blacklead warehouse, was placed across the pavement or footway of the street from the end of their van to the opening into the cellar of their warehouse, during the hours prohibited by the Metropolitan Police & Metropolitan Streets Acts, for using the same for that purpose, thus blocking the footway so that foot passengers were obliged either to get over the slide or to go round by the horses' heads in the roadway, or to wait until the obstruction was removed.

The "slide" was very slippery from blacklead, & in his attempt to get over it a foot passenger slipped, lost his footing, & fell, receiving serious injuries; & in an action against defts. for negligence the Lord Chief Justice directed the jury that defts., being admittedly guilty of an illegal act, were bound to guard the public against injury ensuing therefrom. The jury found that pltf. had only acted reasonably & prudently in what he did, & gave him a verdict for £300 damages:—Held: the judgment entered for pltf. was right, as it was for the jury to decide what was the proper course for him to adopt in all the circumstances, & to say whether or not his attempt to get over the "slide" was the act of a reasonable & prudent man.

The opinion expressed by LORD ESHER, M.R., when he was BRETT, J., in Adams v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co., No. 795, ante, that "if the inconvenience is so great that it is reasonable to get rid of it by an act not obviously dangerous, & executed without carelessness, the person causing the inconvenience by his negligence would be liable for any injury that might result from an attempt to avoid such inconvenience," approved of & acted on.—LEE v. NIXEY (1890), 63 L. 797. ——.]—Defts., owners of a shipbuilding yard on the Mersey, being about to launch a vessel, gave the usual notices, & arranged with the owners of some moorings nearly opposite to pay half the cost of removing the buoy marking their position. Pltfs.' ketch, which was coming up the river on the morning of the intended launch, finding the wind falling light, & with a view to bringing up, let her anchor drag, &, fouling the moorings, the vessel remained fast. Messages were sent by defts. to the master of the ketch to move her, &, finally, a tug, whilst offering to tow the ketch away, delivered a letter advising her master to slip, & stating that defts. would not be responsible for any damage to the ketch or for any accident to any person on board. The master of the ketch, however, thinking his vessel was out of the zone of danger, refused to slip without an undertaking from defts. that they would be answerable for the cost of the anchor if lost. Defts., not deeming it prudent to incur the risk of further delay, launched the vessel, which struck the ketch. In an action of damage by collision, brought by the owners of the ketch, the President found that the master of the ketch had no right to make it a condition before moving that defts. should give an undertaking to replace the anchor, & that he was at fault for not slipping his chain & removing to a place of safety, but that defts. were alone to blame as they had, for their own purposes, & to pltfs.' injury, launched the vessel without regard to the possible consequences to pltfs.' ketch & her crew. Pltfs.' negligence, therefore, did not excuse defts., because they might, by the exercise of care, have avoided the mischief which their deliberate action caused:—Held: pltfs.' ketch was alone to blame,

810. General rule—Damage essential.]—The gist of an action for negligence seems to me to be the harm to person or property negligently perpetrated. In a certain class of cases the mere violation of a legal right imports a damage. "Actual perceptible damage," says PARKE, B., in Embrey v. Owen (1851), 6 Ex. 353, at p. 368 "is not indispensable, as the foundation of an action; it is sufficient to show the violation of a right, in which case the law will presume damage." But this principle is not as a rule applicable to actions for negligence; which are not brought to establish a bare right, but to recover compensation for substantial injury (BOWEN, L.J.).—BRUNSDEN v. HUMPHREY (1884), 14 Q. Had pltf. remained in her room she would not in fact have been injured. Her injuries resulted from her endeavour to escape by means of an improvised rope to the ground floor. But the jury have expressly found that pltf. acted reasonably in the circumstances of the case. I agree with this finding; it was fully justified by the evidence. . . . The conduct of pltf. cannot be effectively tested by the light of facts subsequently & precisely ascertained; it is necessary to regard the circumstances as they appeared to her at the time (MCCARDIE, J.).—MACLENAN v. SEGAR, [1917] 2 K. 819. —— Death from nervous shock—Runaway motor lorry.]—Defts.' servant left a motor lorry at the top of a steep & narrow street unattended, with the engine running, & without having taken proper precautions to secure it. The lorry started off by itself & ran violently down the incline. Pltf.'s wife, who had been walking up the street with her children, had just parted with them a little below a point where the street makes a bend, when she saw the lorry rushing round the bend towards her. She became frightened for the safety of her children, who by that time were out of sight round the bend, & who she knew must have met the lorry in its course. She was almost immediately afterwards informed by bystanders that a child answering the description of one of hers had been injured. In consequence of her fright & anxiety she suffered a nervous shock which eventually caused her death, whereby her husband lost the benefit of her services. In an action by the husband under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93):—Held: on the assumption that the shock was caused by what the woman saw with her own eyes as distinguished from what she was told by bystanders, pltf. was entitled to

There was evidence of damage to the interest of pltf. in the goods. It was a loss of the value which the goods represented to pltf. at the time of the accident, of which he was deprived by the wrongful act of the servants of defts., & therefore he ought to recover £10, which the jury found in his favour (KENNEDY, J.).—BROWN v. HAND-IN-HAND FIRE INSURANCE SOCIETY (1895), 11 T. No damage was caused to the tug or her equipment by the collision.

In an action brought by pltfs. to recover from deft. as damages the amount of towage remuneration which they would have earned if they had completed the towage contract:—Held: pltfs. had no cause of action, for, although there was negligence on the part of deft.'s servants, the loss of towage remuneration was not damage to pltfs. which was the direct consequence of the negligence so as to be recoverable in law.—REMORQUAGE À HÉLICE (SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME DE) v. BENNETTS, [1911] 1 K. Deft. neglected to measure the site, & acting on information which was unauthorised by pltfs., prepared plans on the asumption that the site was smaller than it was in fact. Pltfs., having paid deft., for the plans, were unable to raise funds to build on the site, & ultimately parted with it, & then discovered the error in the plans. In an action to recover the money paid for the plans on the ground of a total failure of consideration, or in the alternative, for damages for negligence:—Held: there had not been a total failure of consideration, but as deft. had been negligent pltfs. were entitled to damages although, as they had sustained no loss from his negligence, those damages would be only nominal.—COLUMBUS CO. v. CLOWES, [1903] 1 K. In a letter of instructions to deft. pltf. inserted libellous statements concerning two officials of the co. Deft. handed the letter to his partner, who negligently left it at the co.'s office. The manager found it, read it, & communicated its contents to the two persons defamed, each of whom sued pltf. for libel & obtained judgment against him for damages & costs. Pltf. then sought to recover from deft. the amount which he had paid for damages & costs in the libel actions as damages for breach of an implied duty to keep secret the letter of instructions. The jury found that it was the duty of deft. to keep the letter secret, that he had neglected that duty, & that the actions for libel & the damages recovered therein were the natural & probable consequence of deft.'s negligence, & they awarded pltf. substantial damages:—Held: pltf.'s liability for damages in the libel actions did not result from deft.'s breach of duty, & deft. was liable for nominal damages only.—WELD-BLUNDELL v. STEPHENS, [1920] A. death was caused by reason of defts.' negligence, & who was residing with her father at the time of her death.

What is contemplated is the pecuniary loss which has been sustained by one member or the whole of the limited class by reason of a wrongful act in respect of which deceased could have brought an action had he lived. It seems to me that that reasoning excludes funeral expenses from the damages which are recoverable under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), & it is therefore impossible for us to say that this particular claim ought to fall under a different category (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—CLARK v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO., LTD., [1906] 2 K. (inter alia), £200:—Held: the rule laid down by LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Baker v. Bolton, No. 843, ante, that "in a civil ct. the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury; & the damages as to pltf.'s wife must stop with the period of her existence," was limited to actions based on the tort, which was the wrong that caused the death; but where there was also another & independent cause of action, the loss of services caused by the death of the wife was an element which might be included in the damages awarded to the husband.

I have come to the conclusion that this exception from the general principles on which damages are based, only applies to cases where the cause of action is the wrong which caused the death & does not apply to cases where there is a cause of action independently of such wrong (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—JACKSON v. WATSON & SONS, [1909] 2 K. 855. ——— ———.]—(1) An action on Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), is maintainable in cases where none could have been maintained by the deceased if he had survived the effects of the injury: as the condition in the statute that the action could have been maintained by deceased if death had not ensued, has reference not to the nature of the loss or injury sustained, but to the circumstances under which the bodily injury arose, & the nature of the wrongful act, neglect, or default complained of.

If deceased had, by his own negligence materially contributed to the accident whereby he lost his life, as he, if still living, could not have maintained an action in respect of any bodily injury, notwithstanding there might have been negligence on the part of defts., the present action could not have been supported. But supposing the circumstances of the negligence to have been such that, if death had not ensued, deceased might have brought his action in respect of any injury arising to him from it, we are of opinion that his representative may maintain an action in respect of an injury arising from a pecuniary loss occasioned by the death, although that pecuniary loss would not have resulted from the accident to deceased had he lived (COCKBURN, C.J.).

(2) We are of opinion that as the benefit of education & the enjoyment of the greater comforts & conveniences of life depend on the possession of pecuniary means to procure them, the loss of these advantages is one which is capable of being estimated in money, in other words, is a pecuniary loss; & therefore the loss of such advantages arising from the death of a father whose income ceases with his life is an injury in respect of which an action can be maintained on the statute. A fortiori, the loss of a pecuniary provision, which fails to be made owing to the premature death of a person by whom such provision would have been made had he lived, is clearly a pecuniary loss for which compensation may be claimed (COCKBURN, C.J.).—PYM v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. 859. Remedy given to individuals — Not to a class.]—(1) In an action under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), no compensation can be given by way of solatium for grief or loss of society of deceased.

(2) The remedy given by this statute is to individuals, not to a class; & therefore, on the death of a person whose income arose from land & personalty independent of any exertion of his own, no portion of which was lost to his family by his death, the action is maintainable if in consequence of that death the mode of its distribution among the members is changed.—PYM v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. In an action under Fatal Accidents Act:—Held: in entering upon the river & cutting & removing the ice deft. was doing a lawful act, & was liable to pltf. only if, in exercising that right, he unnecessarily & improperly interfered with the right of the boys to skate in safety upon the river, & their death was the result of that interference.—CASTALDI v. DENISON (1920), 47 O. The declaration alleged that deft. was possessed of a messuage, with the appurtenances, near to a common & public footway, & that, in front of & before the said messuage, & parcel of the appurtenances thereof, & close to, & by the side of, the said footway, & abutting upon, & opening into, the same, there then was a large hole, vault, or area, which hole, vault, or area, deft., by reason of the possession of the said messuage, with the appurtenances, before & at the time when, etc., ought to have so sufficiently guarded & fenced as to prevent injury to persons lawfully passing in & along the said footway:—Held: (2) the duty of deft. to fence the area, was properly alleged; (3) the judge at the trial was justified in amending the declaration, by adding the words "with the appurtenances"; (4) the declaration need not negative the existence of any relations entitled to compensation, other than those on whose behalf the action purported to be brought.—BARNES v. WARD (1850), 9 C. 872. Necessity for actual loss.]—FRANKLIN v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. CO., No. 889, post.

873. ——.]—In an action on Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), by a father for injury resulting from the death of his son, it appeared that the father was a working mason & that the son was a boy of fourteen years of age who had earned 4*s.* a week for about a year or two, but at the time of his death was without employment. There was no evidence of the cost of boarding & clothing the boy. The judge having left it to the jury to say whether the father had sustained any pecuniary loss by the death of his son, & the jury having found a verdict with £20 damages:—Held: as there was evidence for the jury, pltf. was entitled to retain the verdict for the full amount; such an action could not be maintained without some evidence of actual pecuniary damage.—DUCKWORTH v. JOHNSON (1859), 4 H. & N. 653; 29 L. 874. ——.]—The onus must lie on pltf. in these cases to prove that the earnings exceeded the cost of maintenance, & if pltf. failed to prove that he must go on to give affirmative evidence that that state of things would not continue. In order to maintain the action there must be made out either an actual loss or a reasonable probability of pecuniary benefit which had been destroyed by the death (per CUR.).—MEDDAM v. MINNIS (1893), 37 Sol. Jo. 253, D. C.

875. ——.]—TAFF VALE RY. CO. v. JENKINS, No. 885, post.

876. —— Grief or loss of services insufficient.]—The compensation to which the party for whose benefit an action is brought, under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), by the exor. or administrator of deceased person, must be confined to the mere pecuniary loss sustained by the death of the deceased, the damages being measured by such portion of his income as claimant may be inferred to have enjoyed.

It is a pure question of pecuniary compensation, & nothing more, which is contemplated by the Act [Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93)], no matter who or what the survivors may be. If, for instance, the wealthiest peer of England, who rolled in riches, were to marry a lady enjoying a pension during her life, & she were to be killed by the negligence of another, her husband would be entitled to bring an action under this Act, in which he might recover compensation for the deprivation of his wife's pension. On the other hand, the poorest & meanest peasant, who may lose nothing at all by the death of his wife, is not entitled to sue. The mental sufferings & deprivation of comfort inflicted on the peasant may be as great as those sustained by the peer, or greater, but still, unless he has sustained some pecuniary loss, he has no right of action. . . . It is utterly impossible for a jury to estimate any sum as a compensation for the injured feelings of the survivors; all that is left which is appreciable after the death of the party killed is the pecuniary loss sustained by his family, & this Act enables them to recover that which deceased would himself have sued for, had the accident not terminated fatally. The framers of the Act never could have meant to give compensation to the parent for the mere deprivation of his son, or the widow for that of her husband. If that were so, a man of wealth losing his only child, the heir of his honours & fortune, & the object of all his human hopes, might be entitled to claim an almost indefinite sum. Nothing on earth could compensate such a man for such a loss (POLLOCK, C.B.).—GILLARD v. LANCASHIRE & YORKSHIRE RY. CO. (1848), 12 L. T. O. S. 356, N. P.

Annotation:—Refd. Pym v. G. N. Ry. (1863), 4 B. & S. 396.

877. —— Merely nominal loss insufficient.]—To support an action under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), for damages resulting from death by negligence such damages must be special damages, & the action cannot be supported to recover merely nominal damages.

Where, therefore, an action was brought by the father, as administrator, of a child between eight & nine years old who was killed by the negligent act of deft. & the pltf. incurred the expense of £2 for medical treatment & nursing & £5 for its burial, & the jury found negligence as against deft., & that pltf. had sustained no pecuniary damage through the death of the child, but assessed damages to the amount of £7 for the two before-mentioned items of expense:—Held: these items could not be recovered, & as there was no pecuniary damage deft. was entitled to the verdict.—BOULTER v. WEBSTER (1865), 5 New Rep. 238; 11 L. T. 598; 13 W. R. 289.

878. —— Loss must arise from relationship—Not from contract.]—In order to maintain an action under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), the persons upon whose behalf it is brought must prove that during the lifetime of deceased a pecuniary advantage accrued to them owing to their relationship with him; they are not entitled to compensation under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), if the only pecuniary benefit to them from his life was derived from a contract which they had entered into with him. Pltf., as administrator, sued defts. to recover damages for the death of his son, who had been killed by their negligence. Deceased was a bricklayer, & received from pltf. the wages of a skilled workman; he was of great assistance to pltf., who was also a bricklayer; owing to the loss of assistance from deceased, pltf. could not take the contracts which he had done during his son's lifetime:—Held: pltf. had not suffered a pecuniary loss by his son's death entitling him to sue under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93).—SYKES v. NORTH EASTERN RY. CO. (1875), 44 L. J. C. P. 191; 32 L. T. 199; 39 J. P. 280; 23 W. R. 473.

390. Son accustomed to supply parents with provisions.]—In an action founded upon Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), for injury resulting from death, legal liability alone is not the test of injury in respect of which damages may be recovered; but the reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage by the relation remaining alive may be taken into account by the jury; & damages may be given in respect of that expectation being disappointed, & the probable pecuniary loss thereby occasioned. Therefore, in an action by a father for injury resulting from the death of his son through the negligence of the servants of a railway co., it appeared that the son, who was twenty-seven years of age, & unmarried, but living away from his parents, had for the last seven or eight years been in the habit of visiting them once a fortnight, & of taking them on those occasions presents of tea, sugar, & other provisions, besides money, amounting in the whole to about £20 a year:—Held: the jury were warranted in inferring that the father had such a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of his son's life as to entitle him to recover damages under the statute; but it was not competent to the jury to award him compensation for the expenses incurred by him for his son's funeral or for family mourning.—DALTON v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. The wife, had she survived her mother who was aged eighty at the time of the wife's death, would have been absolutely entitled to the sum of £7,000:—Held: in an action by the husband against the carriers for damages, under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), he had no reasonable prospect of pecuniary benefit if his wife's death had not occurred, & was not, therefore, entitled to damages for her death.—HARRISON v. LONDON & NORTH-WESTERN RY. During the time they were so living apart deceased did not support pltf., though he occasionally gave her small sums of money:—Held: the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as pltf. had lost her legal right to support by reason of her adultery, & had no reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage by deceased remaining alive which could be taken into account by a jury.—STIMPSON v. WOOD & SON (1888), 57 L. 895. ——.] — A free pass, obtained by an official of another railway co. for himself & wife, from the London & South Western Ry. co. for the journey from London to Jersey, referred, on the face of it, to the following condition printed on the back: "that it shall be taken as evidence of an agreement that the co. are relieved from all responsibility for any injury, delay, loss, or damage, however caused, that may be sustained by the person or persons using this pass." Through the negligence of the servants of the railway co. & during the transit from Southampton to the Channel Islands, the steamer stranded, & the official was drowned. His own, & his wife's, luggage were also lost. The widow on behalf of herself & infant children claimed, against the fund paid by the railway co. into ct. in a limitation suit, for the loss of her husband & father of the children. The registrar disallowed the claim:—Held: (1) in respect of the loss of life, as the widow & children could only claim under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), where, if death had not ensued, the party injured would have been entitled to maintain an action for damages, the conditions on which the free pass was granted, & which deceased must, from his official position, be taken to have known, included the sea passage as well as the land transit & barred the claim; (2) in respect of the claim by the widow, as administratrix of her husband, for the loss of his personal effects, & in her own right, for the loss of her luggage, the condition attaching to the pass equally precluded any claim.

It is conceded that the widow & children can only claim for loss, under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), where the passenger himself, if alive, could claim for injury done to himself, & the question, therefore, turns on the conditions on which deceased was carried (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE STELLA, [1900] P. 161; 69 L. 898. Risk voluntarily incurred.] — Where an injury happens to a servant while in the actual use of an instrument, engine or machine, in the course of his employment, of the nature of which he is as much aware as his master, & the use of which is, therefore, the proximate cause of the injury, he cannot, at all events if the evidence is consistent with his own negligence in the use of it being the real cause, nor in case of his dying from the injury can his representative, under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), recover against his master, there being no evidence that the injury arose through the personal negligence of the master. Nor is it any evidence of such personal negligence of the master that he has in use in his works an engine or machine less safe than some other which is in general use.

Where a labourer was killed through the fall of a weight which he was raising by means of an engine to which he attached it by fastening on to it a clip, & the clip had slipped off it:—Held: there was no case to go to the jury, in an action by his representative against the master, although it appeared that another & safer mode of raising the weights was usual, & had been discarded by the orders of deft.

A servant cannot continue to use a machine he knows to be dangerous at the risk of his employer (POLLOCK, C.B.).

There is nothing legally wrongful in the use by an employer of works or machinery more or less dangerous to his workmen, or less safe than others that might be adopted. It may be inhuman so to carry on his works as to expose his workmen to peril of their lives, but it does not create a right of action for an injury which it may occasion when, as in this case, the workman has known all the facts & is as well acquainted as the master with the nature of the machinery & voluntarily uses it (BRAMWELL, B.).—DYNEN v. LEACH (1857), 26 L. In an action brought by the widow of deceased against his employers under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), to recover damages in respect of his death, the jury found (a) that defts. had not exercised due care to have the tramway in a safe & proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risks; (b) that it was dangerous to descend from the tramway without a ladder; (c) that deceased had the same means of knowing that it was dangerous as defts. had; & (d) that deceased did know that it was dangerous:—Held: in the absence of any finding by the jury that deceased had agreed to undertake the risk of descending from the tramway without a ladder or other safe means of descent, pltf. was entitled to judgment upon the findings of the jury.—WILLIAMS v. BIRMINGHAM BATTERY & METAL CO., [1899] 2 Q. 900. Absence of duty to deceased.]—If a highway is dedicated to the public with a dangerous obstruction upon it, such as would have been a nuisance if placed upon an ancient way, as a flight of steps, or a projecting flap, no action can be maintained against the person dedicating it for an injury caused thereby. Nor will an action lie against the owner of a house having a covered area adjoining a public footway, which area was in existence before & at the time of the dedication of the highway, & was dedicated to the public before Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), for an injury to an individual from the giving way of the covering of the area in consequence of the wear & tear occasioned by public user. In 1830, houses were erected on land adjoining a new road constructed at a high level as an approach to a new bridge across the Thames. Between these houses & this road was a space which was covered over, as a means of access to the houses, by a flagging in which were gratings to let light & air to the lower part of the buildings, which formed separate tenements, the entrance to which was upon the lower level at the rear. The space so covered had become, by dedication prior to Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), a part of the public footway, & was used as such by the public. In 1862, in consequence of a large number of persons congregating upon the spot, the flagging & grating in front of one of the houses, having become weakened by user, gave way, & several persons were precipitated into the area below, a depth of about thirty feet, & one of them was killed. In an action by the widow of deceased, under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93):—Held: there being under the circumstances no legal liability on the part of the lessee of the house to keep the surface of this way in repair, the action was not maintainable, the gulf at the side of the causeway being the result of the road being raised by the makers of it, not by the land at the side being excavated by the proprietors of it; & the artificial character of the flagging & grating did not make it more or less a way to be repaired by the parish.

It is for pltf. to make out that deft. has been guilty of the breach of some duty owed to deceased, & that thereby the accident was occasioned (ERLE, C.J.). — ROBBINS v. JONES (1863), 15 C. B. N. 906. Employers paying maximum compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act—With knowledge & consent of deceased's widow—No further liability—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 1 (2) (b).]—Pltf. who was the widow of a workman killed by accident arising out of & in the course of his employment, brought an action under the Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), against defts., who had been his employers, charging them with negligence causing her husband's death. The statement of claim alleged that deceased workman left as dependants pltf. & six children ; that all the dependants except pltf. had claimed under above Act, against defts., & that an award had been made apportioning the total sum of £300 equally between the children. Defts. by their defence, after denying the alleged negligence, pleaded that pltf. had by letters from her solr. made a claim on them on behalf of herself & her children for compensation in respect of the death of her husband ; that defts. having by letter admitted liability under above Act, had paid into the county ct. the maximum amount payable under above Act, namely, £300 ; that the children by their next friend had applied to the county ct. for an order for the investment & allotment of the sum of £300 between the dependants, & that the county ct. judge by his award had allotted £50 to each of the children & directed that £45 out of each sum out of £50 should be invested, & out of the residue the sum of 18*s.* a week together with the interest on the invested money should be paid to pltf. for the benefit of the children ; that pltf. throughout was cognisant of the facts & approved of & concurred in the application & attended the hearing & thereat renounced her rights & interest in the sum of £300 in favour of her children, & that the award was made with her consent. The defence stated that defts. would therefore contend that this action was barred & was not maintainable by reason of above sub-sect. It appeared that in the application for allotment the next friend named pltf. as a dependant, but applied for a division among the children only & expressly stated that pltf. did not claim under above Act :—Held : on the facts as stated pltf. had made herself a party to the claim for compensation under above Act, & was therefore precluded by above sub-sect. from claiming damages against defts. independently of above Act.—CODLING v. MOWLEM (JOHN) & CO., LTD., [1914] 3 K. 932. ——.] —Pltf., a workman earning 38*s.* a week, sued defts. to recover damages for the death of his wife, who was knocked down by a motor taxicab belonging to defts. & instantly killed. The wife had performed the ordinary household duties of a woman in her position, & in consequence of her death pltf. had to employ a housekeeper & to incur extra expenses of management by the housekeeper instead of by his deceased wife. The jury assessed pltf.'s damages at £50 :—Held : under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), the damages recoverable in such an action are not limited to the value of money lost, or the money value of things lost, but include the monetary loss incurred by replacing services rendered gratuitously by the deceased where there was a reasonable prospect of their being rendered freely in the future but for the death, &, therefore, pltf. was entitled to recover the damages assessed by the jury.—BERRY v. HUMM & Co., [1915] 1 K. The proper question for the jury in such cases, is whether the circumstances are such that if deceased instead of meeting his death had been only wounded in consequence of the conduct of deft., he would have been entitled to damages for the injury.

942. —— —— —— ——.]—At the trial of an action under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), brought for the benefit of the mother, widow, & children of R., claiming damages from defts. for having by their negligence caused the death of R., it was proved that deceased was under a covenant to pay his mother an annuity of £200 during their joint lives. A witness was then called for pltf., who stated that he was an "accountant," & that he had personal experience as to the mode in which insurance business was conducted. He gave evidence, after referring to certain tables used by insurance offices called the "Carlisle Tables," as to the average duration of life of two persons of the ages of the mother & son respectively, & as to the price for which an annuity for the mother's life could be bought. The admissibility of this evidence was objected to by defts., & was ruled to be admissible. In summing up the judge directed the jury that they might, if they thought proper, calculate the mother's damages by ascertaining what was the sum which would purchase an annuity of £200 for a person of her age, according to the average duration of human life; & that in calculating the widow's & children's damages they might, if they thought proper, take as a guide the period of the probable duration of life of a person of the age of deceased. On the argument of a bill of exceptions tendering to the ruling of the learned judge in admitting the evidence & to his direction to the jury:—Held: (1) the witness was competent to give evidence as to the probable duration of life & the price of the annuity, although not an actuary; & the evidence was relevant & properly admitted; (2) the direction to the jury as to the calculation of the mother's damages was wrong; (3) the direction as to the mode of calculating the damages recoverable by the widow & children might be construed as meaning that the probable duration of life of a person of the same age, & in the same circumstance as the deceased, was an element to be taken into the calculation of the jury with the rest of the evidence, & being so construed was correct.—ROWLEY v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. 943. —— Plaintiff entitled to pension—Pension from Crown.]—In assessing the damages in an action under the Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), the fact that pltf. is, in consequence of the death, in receipt of a pension from the Crown ought, as a general rule, to be taken into consideration, notwithstanding that the pension is dependent on the voluntary bounty of the Crown. That rule, however, is subject, in cases in which the pension is received under the Navy Pay & Pensions Order, 1920, to the necessity of also taking into consideration the probability that the Minister of Pensions will, in the exercise of the powers conferred by that Order, reduce the pension by the amount of the damages awarded in the action.—BAKER v. DALGLEISH S.S. 4. Conditions of appointment — Apprenticeship to public notary—Necessity for whole time employment.]—An Act of Parliament required, that before a person should be allowed to act as a public notary he should have been admitted & enrolled in the ct. wherein notaries had been usually admitted; & that no person should be enrolled as a public notary unless he should have been bound by contract of apprenticeship to serve for seven years to a public notary, & during that term should have continued in such service; & further, that he should during the whole time & term of service specified in such contract of apprenticeship, or during the space of seven years thereof at least, continue & be actually employed by such public notary in the proper business of a public notary:—Held: a party bound apprentice for the term of seven years, who during the whole of that term acted as a banker's clerk daily till five o'clock in the evening, & after that hour went to the notary & presented bills of exchange, & prepared protests, was not actually employed by the public notary during the whole period of seven years within the Act of Parliament, & consequently he was not entitled to act as a notary; & the ct. refused a mandamus to the Scriveners' co. to admit such a party to the freedom of the co., in order that he might be admitted to practise as a notary.

A notary in the city of London has many more duties. Almost all the charter-parties are prepared by notaries . . . There is another part of the duty of notaries, & that is, to receive the affidavits of mariners & masters of ships & then to draw up their protests. . . . Besides that, many documents pass before notaries under their notarial seal, which gives effect to them, & renders them evidence in foreign cts., though certainly not in our cts. of common law. There is a great deal, therefore, to be done by a notary perfectly independent of, & distinct from, this mere matter of presenting bills of exchange & drawing up protests (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).—R. v. SCRIVENERS' Co. (1830), 10 B. & C. 511; 5 Man. & Ry. K. B. 543; 8 L. J. O. S. K. B. 199; 109 E. R. 540.

5. —— —— —— Concurrent apprenticeship to attorney.]—Public Notaries Act, 1801 (c. 79), enacts, that no person shall be admitted as a public notary unless he shall have been bound to a notary for seven years, & during the whole time & term of service shall continue & be actually employed by such notary. From 1828 to 1837, P. the elder, carried on the business of a notary, & also of an attorney & solr., in the same office, & to an equal extent. In 1828, P. the younger was bound by indenture to serve him as a notary for seven years, & in 1832 was bound to him as an articled clerk in his profession of attorney & solr. P. the younger was employed in both businesses, according to the directions of P. the elder, & served him in both from 1828 to 1837, being employed as much in one as in the other. P. the younger having obtained a mandamus to the Scriveners Co. to be admitted a member of that co., in order to practise as a notary, the co. returned, that P. the younger did not continue for seven years in the service of P. the elder as a notary, & that he did not continue to be, & was not, during the said term of seven years, employed by the said P. the elder in the business of a notary. Traverses having been taken on these averments:—Held: there was not such a continuance in the service of the notary, or actual employment by him in that capacity, during the seven years, as amounted to a compliance with the statute.—R. v. SCRIVENERS' CO. 10. Public convenience — First consideration.] —The Master of the Faculties, in exercising the discretion given to him by Public Notaries Act, 1833 (c. 70), s. 2, in the appointment of notaries public, will, whilst paying due regard to vested interests above all things, consider the convenience & accommodation of the merchants, shipowners, & bankers, carrying on business in the town where it is proposed to appoint additional notaries. Increase of population alone, unless accompanied by an increase of shipping & mercantile business, is not sufficient ground for the appointment of additional notaries.—GRAHAM v. SMART (1863), 9 Jur. SUB-SECT. 4.—NOTARIES PRACTISING IN BRITISH DOMINIONS.

See . 8, c. 21, s. 2 ; & Public Notaries (c. 90), s. 4.

39. Considerations governing appointment—Public convenience first consideration.]—(1) The jurisdiction of the Ct. of Faculties to appoint notaries public in the colonies is derived from 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, & neither that nor any other statutory enactment prescribes any qualifications to be possessed by appcts., who in all cases are appointed in the discretion of the Master of the Faculties.

Where a chartered accountant, holding the appointments of official assignee of insolvent estates in the State of Victoria & comr. for taking affidavits in the Supreme Cts. of several States of the Australian Commonwealth, applied to be appointed a notary public for the State of Victoria, & supported his application by an influential memorial & the usual certificate of personal fitness, the Master of the Faculties, though the more recent practice had been to appoint solrs., thought fit in the special circumstances of the case to grant appct. a faculty for his appointment as prayed.

B.'s application is opposed by the Society of Notaries of Victoria on three grounds: (a) that there are already enough notaries in the State of Victoria ; (b) that B. is not a solr. ; (c) that his official position would give him an opportunity of unfair competition with the existing notaries. . . . The present population of Melbourne is said to be about 500,000, & of the whole State of Victoria 1,200,000. I need not say the mercantile business of Melbourne has also vastly increased. It would seem, therefore, that the increase of the number of notaries from twenty to thirty-six is by no means in proportion to the growth of the colony in population & commerce. The question of the proper number of notaries for any particular place is always a difficult point to deal with. The first & controlling consideration must be the convenience of the public. . . . The second ground of opposition is that Mr. B. is not a solr. . . . B. is not a solr., but he holds an official position demanding from its occupant familiarity with legal documents & a certain amount of legal knowledge. He is a comr. of the Supreme Ct. for taking affidavits in four of the Australian States, &, in addition to other evidence that he fulfils the duties of those various offices efficiently, I have a certificate of HOLROYD, J., one of the judges of the Supreme Ct. of Victoria, given on the strength of long personal knowledge, that B. is a fit & proper person to be appointed a notary. . . . There remains the third objection, that B.'s official position gives him special opportunities of competition with other notaries. I think the area of this competition is narrower than was at first supposed by either side. It was suggested as one of the advantages of B.'s appointment that he would be able to notarially attest documents executed by bkpts. for the purpose of vesting their extra colonial property in their trustee in bkpcy. ; but counsel for the opponents, pointed out that in many cases of insolvency B. in his official capacity as assignee would himself be the trustee, & that it would be impossible for him to notarially attest a deed to which he was a party or under which he acquired an interest. In all such cases it is clear another notary must be employed. But whatever substance there may be in the objection, & I am not prepared to say there is none, I do not think I ought because of it to refuse to make an appointment which independently has been shown to my satisfaction to be for the public benefit. It seems to me that any danger of unfair competition, if there be any, arises from a system which the colonial authorities, I doubt not for good & sufficient reasons, have established of allowing a gentleman holding B.'s official position to carry on his profession for his own profit at the same time. I think if there is any objection to that system it is a matter entirely for the colonial authorities or legislature, & that I should be going outside my province if I held that because the arrangement in the State of Victoria is what I have described I must refuse to appoint B. a notary (SIR LEWIS DIBDIN).

Sect. 1.—Appointment: Sub-sects. 4 & 5. Sects. 2 3. Parts III. & IV. Sects. 1 & 2.]

(2) 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, contains no provision as to costs, & I am informed by the registrar, who has been conversant with the practice here for the last fifty years, that orders for costs are never made in these cases as to the appointments of notaries (SIR LEWIS DIBDIN).—BAILLEAU v. VICTORIAN SOCIETY OF NOTARIES, [1904] P. 180; *sub nom. 41. —— ——.]—In considering an application by a person to be appointed a notary public in a colonial district, the Master of the Faculties attaches great weight to the views of a society of notaries practising in the district. An appointment was, however, made for Melbourne, in the State of Victoria, notwithstanding the opposition of such a society, on very strong evidence that appct. was personally suitable, & that the number of existing notaries at Melbourne was insufficient for the convenience of the public.—FAY v. SOCIETY OF NOTARIES FOR THE STATE OF VICTORIA, [1909] P. 15; 25 T. 67. —— Notarial act outside jurisdiction—Certificate of acknowledgment of fine.] — The notarial certificate required in the case of a fine acknowledged in a foreign country, must be under seal; a defect in this particular cannot be supplied by proof of the handwriting of the cognisors.—CRUTTENDEN v. BOURBELL (1808), 1 Taunt. 144; 127 E. R. 787.

68. Notarial deed on several sheets—Initials on each sheet not necessary.]—A notarial deed was written on several pieces of paper:—Held: each paper did not require the initials of the notary.—HAMEL v. PANET (1876), 2 App. Cas. 121; 46 L. J. P. C. 5; 35 L. T. 741, P. C.

69. Certificate of affidavit of commissioners—Must state affidavit to be on oath.]—In a recovery, if the acknowledgment of the vouchees is taken abroad, a notarial certificate made to authenticate the affidavit of the comrs. must distinctly state that the affidavit was sworn.—LAIDLAW v. COX (1809), 2 Taunt. 205; 127 E. R. 1055.

SECT. 2.—ADMISSIBILITY IN EVIDENCE.

70. General rule.]—A notary public has credit everywhere; but the certificate of a magistrate of a colony abroad requires evidence to his character.

A notary public by the law of nations has credit everywhere: the ct. therefore will give credit to him (LORD ELDON, C.).—HUTCHEON v. MANNINGTON (1802), 6 Ves. 823; 31 E. R. 1327, L. C.

Annotation:—Refd. Cole v. Sherard (1855), 11 Exch. 482.

71. Bill of exchange—Protest—Attestation of notary sufficient proof.]—A protest needs no other proof but the attestation of a notary public.—ANON. (1699), 12 Mod. Rep. 345; 88 E. R. 1369, N. P.

Annotation:—Refd. Cole v. Sherard (1855), 11 Exch. 482.

72. —— —— Duplicate from notary's book.]—Where a bill is paid supra protest for the honour of a party to the bill, it is not necessary that the protest shall have been formally drawn up or extended before the payment; but it is sufficient if the bill has in fact been protested, & a declaration that the payment was for honour made before a notary, & these facts recorded in the notarial registers before the payment was made.

The protest may be drawn up or extended at any time; & where protests had been formerly drawn up before payment for honour & sent to Moscow, & an action was brought by the party who had paid for honour, & it was alleged in the declaration that "the bill was duly protested for non-payment, & thereupon pltf. declared before a notary public that he would pay & did pay the said bill under the said protest, it was held, that duplicate protests, made out from the notary's book after the action was brought were primary evidence as much as the protests sent to Moscow, & sufficient to support the allegation in the declaration, it having been proved that a protest in fact took place before the payment, that a declaration that the payment was for honour had been made before a notary, & that these facts had been then recorded in the notary's book.—GERALOPULO v. WIELER (1851), 10 C. B. 690; 20 L. J. C. P. 105; 17 L. T. O. S. 17; 15 Jur. 316; 138 E. R. 272.

73. —— Presentment by notary—Due presentment not presumed.]—A presentment of a bill of exchange at the banking house after banking hours, when the house is shut, is not sufficient presentment to charge the drawer; & no inference is to be drawn from the circumstance of the bill being presented by a notary that it had been before

74. Notarial acts outside jurisdiction—Certificate of authority of commissioner of court.]—The ct. refused to allow an affidavit, & notarial certificate of an acknowledgment to be filed, under Fines & Recoveries Act, 1833 (c. 74), s. 85, the affidavit purporting to be sworn before one "G., a comr. for taking affidavits in the ct. of Q. B., Canada West," & the notary certifying him to be a comr. of that ct., & as such, qualified to administer oaths.—Re STREET (1845), 2 C. B. 364; 135 E. R. 987.

75. —— Certificate as to act of foreign court—In matters of probate.]—Probate in common form of a will alleged to be valid by the law of a foreign country will be granted, on primâ facie proof that the foreign ct. has adopted it as a valid testament; but the certificate of a notary public, referring to some act of a foreign ct., is not sufficient.—In the Goods of DESHAIS, In the Goods of DE VIGNY (COUNTESS) (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 13; 34 L. 76. —— Copy of settlement from notary's book—Certified & sealed by foreign court.]—The Evidence Act, 1898, of New South Wales, which closely follows the Evidence Act, 1851 (c. 99), by s. 21 provides: "Evidence of (a) any judgment, decree, rule, order, or other judicial proceeding of any ct. of justice out of New South Wales; or (b) any affidavit, pleading, or other legal document filed or deposited in any such ct., may be given by the production of a copy thereof . . . (d) sealed with the seal of such ct., . . ."

According to the law of Warsaw, a marriage settlement is always prepared by a notary, the original being contained in his books of record: upon the death of the notary his books are deposited in the Warsaw Circuit Ct. In a suit in New South Wales there were tendered as evidence of the terms of a marriage settlement made in Warsaw in 1879 two documents, namely, (a) a document dated in 1885 purporting to be certified by a notary as a copy of a settlement of 1879 in his record, (b) a document dated 1915 purporting to be a copy of the settlement from the notary's book, certified & sealed by the Circuit Ct., & stating that the notary being dead his records were kept in the Ct. The two purported copies were in identical terms:—Held: neither document was admissible in evidence at common law.—PERMANENT TRUSTEE CO. OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. FELS, [1918] A. C. 879; 87 L. J. P. C. 172; 119 L. T. 591, P. C.

77. —— Affidavits — Certifying acknowledgments.]—Affidavits of the acknowledgments of fines & recoveries taken cated by a notary public; but if a foreign notary makes this rule an instrument of extortion to draw British property into an enemy's country, the ct. will dispense with the notarial certificate. But it must be upon affidavit of the circumstances.—RUDING v. MANNING (1810), 2 Taunt. 313; 127 E. R. 1098.

78. —— —— ——.]—The affidavit verifying the certificate of an acknowledgment by a married woman residing in Germany of a conveyance, under Fines & Recoveries Act, 1833 (c. 74), s. 85, may be made by notary public.—PEARSALL v. PEARSALL (1840), 1 Man. & G. 973; 133 E. 79. —— —— —— Where commissioner of court not available.]—The ct. allowed a certificate of acknowledgment under Fines & Recoveries Act, 1833 (c. 74), s. 85, to be filed under sect. 85, where the affidavit verifying the certificate was sworn before a notary public in the Hebrides, as the affidavit on which the application was made deposed that there was no comr. of the ct. in the Hebrides or nearer than the main land.—Re GROOM (1869), 17 W. 81. —— —— Necessity for verification of signature of notary.]—Affidavits had been sworn at a place abroad, 250 miles distant from the nearest British consul, before a notary public, whose appended signature had not been verified by a British consul. The ct. allowed them to be put on the file, on the written consent of the solr. for the other parties to the suit being given to the clerk for records & writs.—LYLE v. ELLWOOD, (1872), L. Part I.—Definition, Nature and Characteristics.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Definition of nuisance — Inconvenience materially interfering with ordinary comfort.] — The first point, disputed or not conceded, is the question whether, as between deft. in his character of a person owning, using, & occupying his parcel of land that has been mentioned, on the one hand, & pltfs. in their characters of owner & occupier of the house, offices, & garden occupied by pltf. P., on the other hand, P. is entitled to an untainted & unpolluted stream of air for the necessary supply & reasonable use of himself & his family there, or, in other words, to have there for the ordinary purposes of breath & life an unpolluted & untainted atmosphere; & there can, I think, be no doubt, upon the facts & law that this question must be answered in the affirmative, meaning by "untainted" & "unpolluted" not necessarily air as fresh, free, & pure as at the time of building pltfs.' house the atmosphere there was, but air not rendered to an important degree less compatible, or at least not rendered incompatible, with the physical comfort of human existence, a phrase to be understood of course with reference to the climate & habits of England (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).

The question then arises, whether this is or will be an inconvenience to the occupier of pltfs.' house as occupier of it, a question which must, I think, be answered in the affirmative: though, whether to the extent of being noxious to human health, to animal health, in any sense, or to vegetable health, I do not say nor deem it necessary to intimate an opinion; for it is with a private not a public nuisance that deft. is charged; & both on principle & authority the important point next for decision may properly, I conceive, be thus put; ought this inconvenience to be considered in fact as more than fanciful, more than one of mere delicacy or fastidiousness, as an inconvenience materially interfering with the ordinary comfort physically of human existence, not merely according to elegant or dainty modes & habits of living, but according to plain & sober & simple notions among the English people? (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).

It has been suggested as a ground for not interfering with deft. that, in making & burning bricks on his land he is only using his own soil, in a manner at once common & useful & the most convenient to himself. . . . The argument adopted would prove too much (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—WALTER v. SELFE (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 315; 20 L. J. Ch. 433; 17 L. T. O. S. 103; 15 Jur. 416; 64 E. 3. —— ——.]—Defts. had brought & deposited on their land a quantity of house refuse which caused a nuisance to adjoining occupiers by offensive smells & flies, particularly in the summer time & in certain states of the atmosphere & wind. Defts.' evidence was to the effect that at other times no nuisance was occasioned. The ct. granted an injunction, restraining defts. from bringing refuse on their land, so as to occasion a nuisance, & intimated that if defts.' evidence was correct it was possible to bring the refuse on the land at certain times, but that this must be done at defts.' own responsibility, & that the injunction would not hinder them from doing this, so long as they did not occasion a nuisance.

In law, a public nuisance need not be injurious to health. It is not necessary to show that people have been made ill by what has been done. It is sufficient to show that there has been what is called injury to their comfort, a material interference with the comfort & convenience of life of the persons residing in or coming within the sphere of the influence of that which has been done by defts. on their works (JOYCE, J.).—A.-G. v. KEYMER BRICK & TILE CO., LTD. 5. —— Matters substantially offensive to senses —In addition to matters injurious to health.]—It is an offence under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 47, to keep swine so as to be a "nuisance" in the common law meaning of the term. It is not necessary to such offence that there should be any injury to health.

It appears to me that the word "nuisance" here is used in the ordinary legal sense, & includes, in addition to matters injurious to health, matters substantially offensive to the senses (GROVE, J.).—BANBURY URBAN SANITARY AUTHORITY v. PAGE

PART I. SECT. 1.

1 i. Definition of nuisance—Inconvenience materially interfering with ordinary comfort.]—It is sufficient to constitute a private nuisance arising from offensive odours that material discomfort & annoyance are occasioned for the ordinary purposes of life according to the ordinary mode & custom of living in this country.—MCINTOSH v. CARITTE (1890), N. B. Dig. 654.—CAN.

1 ii. —— ——.]—A nuisance is something unwarranted by law, the effect of which is to obstruct or impede the public in the exercise of their rights; & an inconvenience which causes people to go out of their way to avoid it is a nuisance.—R. v. HALLETT (1911), 45 I. L. T. 84.—IR.

7. Whether act amounts to nuisance—Act not nuisance at time done—Whether becoming nuisance by length of time.]—That which is not a nuisance at the time it is done, cannot become so by length of time.

It was proved that two batts or heaps of stones, made use of in throwing & landing nets, had been in the Tweed a time before the memory of man; & although they were admitted to be nuisances now, yet the ct. would not presume that they were so at the time of their erection but on the contrary, intimated an opinion, that the presumption ought to be, that at first they were not nuisances.—R. v. BELL (1822), 1 L. 11. Nuisance in covenants — Conveyance.] — The purchaser of a piece of land entered into a covenant with the vendor not to do, or suffer to be done, on the land or any part thereof, anything which should be a nuisance to the owners of the adjoining property:—Held: the word "nuisance" must be restricted to its technical meaning, & the establishment of a national school, though it might be an annoyance, & cause a depreciation of the adjoining property, was not a legal nuisance which would be restrained by the injunction of this ct. as a breach of the covenant. The ct. in refusing to grant an injunction did so without costs, being satisfied that defts. might have obtained some other site for the schools, where they would have been a less annoyance to the neighbours.—HARRISON v. GOOD (1871), L. 12. —— ——.] — When BACON, V.-C., held, as he did in Harrison v. Good, No. 11, ante, that the word nuisance in the covenant meant only that which would be an actionable nuisance without the covenant I doubt whether he gave sufficient weight to the consideration that the whole object of having a covenant against nuisance is to give to the covenantor some protection in addition to what he would have had without the covenant (LINDLEY, L.J.).

There [Harrison v. Good, No. 11, ante] the only word which BACON, V.-C., had to deal with was the word "nuisance," & he expressly decided that case upon that ground. . . . 13. —— ——.]—As a matter of construction, the deed means what it says, and the covenants cannot be held limited to trades or businesses ejusdem generis as those previously specially mentioned. . . . What I have to consider is, following in substance the words of COTTON, L.J., in Tod-Heatly v. Benham, No. 12, ante, whether I am satisfied by argument & the evidence before me, that reasonable people living near, having regard to the ordinary use of their houses for pleasurable enjoyment, could & would regard the carrying on of this school in the ordinary way on these premises as causing an injurious, offensive, or disagreeable noise or nuisance. . . . I answer this question in the affirmative (ROMER, J.).—WAUTON v. COPPARD, [1899] 1 Ch. 92; 68 L. J. Ch. 8; 79 L. T. 467; 47 W. R. 72; 43 Sol. Jo. 28.

14. —— ——.] — The conveyance of certain lots that formed part of a residential building estate which was subject to certain restrictive stipulations for the general benefit of the estate contained a covenant by the purchaser in accordance with those restrictive stipulations to fence off the lots from a certain road & that such fence should consist of a dwarf wall with iron palisading, & gates either of wood or iron. There was also a covenant that no bricks should be burnt upon the lots & no "building" should be erected thereon for manufacturing purposes "nor for the carrying on of any noisy, noisome, offensive or dangerous trade or calling," nor as a public-house or retail shop, & no steam-engine should be erected thereon. The purchaser agreed to lease to a co. the exclusive right of posting bills & exhibiting advertisements upon the land originally comprised in his lots, the co. having the right to erect a billposting hoarding thereon. In pursuance of this agreement the co. erected along the boundary of the land a hoarding of a permanent nature 156 ft. long & 15 ft. high, & covered the hoarding with advertisements :—Held : (1) the hoarding was a fence other than of the kind required by the covenant ; (2) the carrying on upon the hoarding the trade of billposting was the use of the hoarding for an " offensive trade or calling."—NUSSEY v. PROVINCIAL BILL POSTING CO. & EDDISON, [1909] 1 Ch. 734 ; 78 L. —— Lease.]—A lease contained a covenant to do nothing to the annoyance or damage of the lessor or his adjoining tenants or occupiers. The lease granted a right of way over a certain passage as then used & enjoyed by the lessee. At the date of the lease the lessee used the passage for the purposes of a business carried on in the premises, & the lessor, who occupied the adjoining premises, used to lock the gate of the passage in the evening, & keep it locked until the morning. Many years afterwards the lessee's representative turned part of the business premises into a place for entertainments & claimed a right of entry to his premises at all hours. The lessor's representative filed a bill for injunction against the nuisance, & against being prevented from locking the gate at night :—Held : he was entitled to the injunction asked for.—COLLINS v. SLADE (1874), 23 W. SECT. 2.—QUESTION OF FACT.

16. General rule.]—The Crown may grant, by letters patent, to a corpn., a town & borough, being caput portus, as Portsmouth, & all the lands between the high & low water marks : but this subject matter of grant, as being jus privatum in the King, must be subject to the jus publicum or public right of the King & people, to the easement of passing & repassing both over the water and the land. Obstructions to such a right may be a nuisance. The question of nuisance is matter of fact.

The question whether a port is straitened by building too far into the water is questio facti & not questio juris, & it is therefore proper that it should be determined by a jury (RICHARDS, C.B.).—A.-G. v. BURRIDGE, PORTSMOUTH HARBOUR CASE (1822), 10 Price, 350 ; 147 E. R. 335.

18. ——.]—By statute, reciting that the river Witham was formerly navigable for lighters, boats, etc. from Lincoln to the sea, but that, by sand & silt brought in by the tide, the outfall had been greatly obstructed, & was in a great measure stopped up, whereby trade & commerce had decayed, powers were given to comrs. for the purpose of restoring the navigation ; & they were authorised, in order for the carrying on & effecting the navigation, to make a new cut through lands adjoining the river, not vested in the comrs. ; & the navigation so made was to be open to all subjects of the realm, paying certain tolls. The comrs. were also empowered, by this & another Act, under certain regulations, to build bridges. The cut was made, & a more direct channel thereby created, through which the waters of the Witham passed to the sea. A co., in whom the powers of the comrs. afterwards became vested by statute, built a bridge, not according to the regulations, & occupying, to some extent, the bed of the new cut. On indictment against them for a nuisance to the river as a public highway, the jury found specially that the co. were guilty of building the bridge, but that it did not obstruct the navigation. On motion to enter the verdict for defts. :—Held : (1) the cut was a public navigable river, the obstruction of which was an indictable offence ; (2) building a bridge partly in the bed of a navigable river was not necessarily a nuisance ; (3) the question whether in fact it be so or not in a particular instance was for a jury : & the verdict here, negativing actual obstruction, was, in effect, an acquittal.—R. v. BETTS (1850), 16 Q. existence. The Ct. of Ch. will restrain the continuance of a nuisance by injunction, wherever substantial damages might be recovered in respect of it by an action at law. An injunction granted to restrain the issuing of smoke & effluvia from a factory chimney, & the making of noise in the factory, although it was situated in a manufacturing town; it being proved that such smoke, effluvia, & noise were a material addition to previously existing nuisances.

The real question in all the cases is the question of fact, viz., whether the annoyance is such as materially to interfere with the ordinary comfort of human existence (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).

(2) The mere discontinuance of a nuisance after the filing of a bill for an injunction is not in itself a ground for dissolving it. Where the nuisance is of a nature to be capable of renewal, the injunction will be made perpetual.

(3) By lapse of time, if the owner of the adjoining tenement, which, in case of light or water, is usually called the servient tenement, has not resisted for a period of twenty years, then the owner of the dominant tenement has acquired the right of discharging the gases or fluid, or sending smoke or noise from his tenement over the tenement of his neighbour; but until that time had elapsed, the owner of the adjoining or neighbouring tenement, whether he has or has not previously occupied it—in other words, whether he comes to the nuisance or the nuisance comes to him—retains his right to have the air that passes over his land pure & unpolluted & the soil & produce of it uninjured by the passage of gases, by the deposit of deleterious substances, or by the flow of water (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—CRUMP v. LAMBERT (1867), L. On appeal to the Ct. of Session, that Ct. found that the ignition of the heaps "would cause material discomfort & annoyance":—Held: this finding was not upon a question of law, & therefore not the subject of appeal.

It appears to me . . . to follow as a necessary inference of law from that finding of fact, that an interdict against a thing which would cause such material discomfort & annoyance is proper to be granted. The word "material" is of great importance there—it excludes any sentimental, speculative, trivial discomfort or personal annoyance of that kind, a thing which the law may be said to take no notice of & to have no care for (LORD SELBORNE).

SECT. 3.—EFFECT OF SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES.

25. Whether act amounts to nuisance.]—To an action for a nuisance, arising from a candle factory, it is no defence that deft. carried on his trade there three years before pltf. became possessed of his premises.

A thing may be a nuisance or not, according to the place in which it is situated; but if any defence arise out of such a state of circumstances, it should be specially pleaded (VAUGHAN, J.).—BLISS v. HALL (1838), 4 Bing. N. C. 183; 1 Arn. 19; 5 Scott, 500; 7 L. J. C. P. 122; 132 E. R. 758; sub nom. BLISS v. HAY, 6 Dowl. 442; 2 Jur. 110.

26. ——.]—All these cases of nuisance or no nuisance arising from particular acts must, from the nature of things, be governed by particular circumstances. If a carriage were to drive up in Belgrave Square, & stand half the day at the door of a house waiting for some person calling there, I do not think that that could be made out to be a nuisance. It may be said to have stayed there an unreasonable time; but it would be difficult indeed to make out that that was a nuisance. Suppose, however, the same thing happened in the narrow part of the street that runs from Covent-Garden to St. Martin's Lane, I do not know that that would not be a nuisance. Each case must be governed by its particular circumstances. The particular place or object in view must be regarded. I take it that all these questions are of this nature, "Are you using that which is the subject-matter of inquiry in a reasonable way & according to the uses for which it was intended?" 25 ii. ——.]—In respect of an act producing personal discomfort a person must, in the interest of the public generally, submit to the discomfort of the circumstances of the place, & the trades carried on around him. A discomfort to be actionable should be substantial. It should be substantial not merely with reference to pltf., but it must be of such a degree that it would be substantial to any person occupying the premises of pltf. irrespective of his position in life, age or state of health.—BIHARI LAL v. MACLEAN (1924), I. 25 iii. ——.]—The question whether a certain thing amounts to a nuisance or not ought always to be considered with reference to the general state of circumstances in the place where the grievance complained of arose; an act might, undoubtedly, become a nuisance in one condition of society which would not be so in another.—SKINNER v. TARAHAN (1823), 1 Nfld. 30. ——.]—User which is neither physically capable of prevention by the owner of the servient tenement, nor actionable, cannot support an easement. This is applicable both to affirmative & negative easements. On this principle the right to make a noise so as to annoy a neighbour cannot be supported by user unless during the period of user the noise has amounted to an actionable nuisance. In considering whether any act is a nuisance, regard must be had not only to the thing done, but to the surrounding circumstances. What would be a nuisance in one locality might not be so in another. A confectioner had for more than twenty years used a pestle & mortar in his back premises, which abutted on the garden of a physician, & the noise & vibration were not felt as a nuisance & were not complained of. But in 1873 the physician erected a consulting room at the end of his garden, & then the noise & vibration became a nuisance to him. He accordingly brought an action for an injunction:—Held: deft. had not acquired a right to an easement of making a noise & vibration, & the injunction was granted.

Whether anything is a nuisance or not is a question to be determined, not merely by an abstract consideration of the thing itself, but in reference to its circumstances (THESIGER, L.J.).—STURGES v. BRIDGMAN (1879), 11 Ch. D. 852; 48 L. J. Ch. 785; 41 L. T. 219; 43 J. P. 716; 28 W. R. 200, C. A.

31. ——.]—Messrs. S. & Sons, a firm of wholesale stationers, had business premises at the corner of Arundel-street, Strand. The highway authority for the city of Westminster expended £500,000, in widening the Strand at this point. Messrs. S. & Sons then allowed their vans to occupy a strip of roadway 62 feet in length in front of their premises, extending 14 feet from the kerb; these vans were there constantly throughout the day for the purpose of loading & unloading. An action was brought to restrain defts. from causing a nuisance to the public thereby. The ct. held upon the evidence that the character of defts.' user was legitimate & not excessive for the purposes of their business; & that, having regard to the width of the road at this point, there was no nuisance to the public:—Held: the question whether the user was reasonable or not was a question of fact & not of law; & having regard to the above findings, defts.' user was reasonable, & the action must be dismissed.—A.-G. v. SMITH (W. It is true that in trespass for a wrongful entry into the land of another, a damage is presumed to have been sustained, though no pecuniary damage be actually proved. So in the case of an action for the obstruction of a right of common, or a right of way, any obstruction of that right is a sufficient cause of action. The L. co. having altered their mode of working within their own limits, whereby they caused an increased flow of water into the levels of the S. co. & other damage:—Held: the S. co. were not entitled to an injunction to restrain the L. co. from so altering their works within their own limits, for the latter co. were entitled to work in their own way, & any damage caused by the L. co. was damnum absque injuriâ; but if the alteration had been made by sinking & boring in the S. grounds it would have been otherwise.—SCOTS MINES CO. v. LEADHILLS MINES CO. (1859), L. T. O. S. 34, H. L.

36. ——.]—Deft.'s canal was constructed under an Act of Parliament, by which the canal was to be open for use by the public on payment of tolls. Defts. were authorised to take land compulsorily & construct the canal, doing as little damage as might be, & to do all things necessary for making & preserving & using the canal, making satisfaction for all damages to be sustained by the owners of lands & hereditaments taken or prejudiced by the execution of the powers of the Act. Comrs. were appointed who were to determine from time to time what sum should be paid for the purchase of lands, & also to determine what other distinct sum should be paid by defts. as recompense for any damages which might be at any time whatsoever sustained by owners of lands or hereditaments by reason of the making or maintaining the canal. The minerals under the canal were expressly reserved to the owners, who were to be at liberty, subject to the provisions of the Act, to work the minerals; provided that no injury be done to the navigation. By another clause, the owners were not to work the minerals without giving three months' notice to defts., who might inspect the mines & might, if they thought proper, prevent the working of the mines, paying to the owners the value; on failure of defts. to inspect the mines the owners were authorised to work them.

The canal having been constructed & used for many years, pltf., who was owner of coal mines under the canal, gave defts. proper notice of his intention to work them; defts. did not inspect & refused to purchase. Pltf. proceeded to work the mines, without regard to the surface, & without attempting to support it, & knowing that the effect would be to let down the surface, & probably disturb the strata, & that there was danger of the water escaping from the canal into the mines; but, except as above, pltf. did not work his mines in any negligent or unskilful or improper manner, but got the coal in the manner in which that vein of coal is ordinarily gotten, & without doing so he could not have obtained the full benefit of his coal. The canal was in good order when pltf. commenced working his coal; & defts. did all they could to keep the canal watertight, by puddling, etc. During part of the time, while pltf.'s working was going on, they had damned back the water, & so emptied the water out of that part of the canal; but they refused to do so for the three months necessary for pltf. to work out his coal. Defts. were guilty of no actual carelessness in the management of their canal, unless it was carelessness to allow the water to be in it while the mines were worked. The result of the working was that the strata became dislocated, & the water of the canal escaped through the cracks & flooded the workings, & pltf. was obliged to abandon his coal. Pltf. thereupon brought an action, charging that defts. having brought water into the canal, so carelessly & improperly managed the canal & the water, that the water escaped & flooded pltf.'s mine. On the above facts, the ct. having power to draw inferences:—Held: an action of tort could not be maintained.

Pltf. having commenced an action for nuisance defts. substituted centrifugal pumps, which diminished the noise of the pumping. When the sinking of the shaft was commenced, it became necessary to lower & lengthen the pumps from time to time, but at the date when the centrifugal pumps were substituted, the sinking of the shaft had arrived at a point at which this operation had ceased to be necessary. Defts. might have used centrifugal pumps from the commencement, but they were less convenient on account of the difficulty of lowering & lengthening them, & on account of the increased labour attending their use, & they were not the pumps ordinarily used in sinking shafts:—Held: the annoyance being temporary & for a lawful object did not amount to a nuisance at law; & the authority conferred on defts. to sink the shaft included all things reasonably necessary for the execution of the work.

It frequently happens that the owners or occupiers of land cause, in the execution of lawful works in the ordinary user of land, a considerable amount of temporary annoyance to their neighbours; but they are not necessarily on that account held to be guilty of causing an unlawful nuisance. . . . 61. Violation of proprietary right of local authority.]—A railway co. constructed a railway on the level across a highway in the district of which the relators were the urban sanitary authority. Subsequently defts. worked coal mines in a proper & usual manner beneath the highway, with the result that a gradual & uniform subsidence to the extent of about ten feet vertically took place of the highway, railway, & surrounding land. No actual damage was done to the highway thereby, nor was it rendered less convenient; but the railway co. placed ballast under the railway so as to maintain it at its original level, with the result that an embankment was formed obstructing the use of the highway:—Held: (1) in an action for damages for the obstruction to the highway, defts. were not liable; (2) assuming the highway to be repairable by the inhabitants at large, & therefore vested in the relators under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 149, the subsidence of the highway having been substantial, the relators, notwithstanding that they had suffered no appreciable damage by reason of such subsidence, were entitled to judgment with nominal damages for the injury to their proprietary right.—A.-G. v. CONDUIT COLLIERY CO., [1895] 1 Q. SECT. 5.—EFFECT OF MOTIVE.

62. Act otherwise lawful.]—SMITH v. KENRICK, No. 8, ante.

63. ——.]—The venue in the margin of a declaration was "London" & the first count stated that pltf. was possessed of certain premises situate at Milton, in the county of Kent, abutting on the north on a public navigable river, to wit, the river Thames, on the east upon another part of the said river called the Blockhouse Dock, in which premises pltf. & the previous occupiers had carried on the trade of mast & block-makers for sixty years; & pltf. as such occupier ought to have the free use & navigation of the river, & of the part thereof called Blockhouse Dock, for the more convenient carrying on his said trade, & with boats, rafts, & timber to pass from the stream of the river, to the side of the premises abutting on the Blockhouse Dock, either at high or low water into the stream of the river, & to load & unload their boats, barges, & other vessels at the side of the said premises. Yet deft. wrongfully placed upon the soil of the said river & upon the soil of that part thereof called the Blockhouse Dock, divers piles, posts, & great quantities of earth, & therewith formed an embankment & obstructed the navigation of the river, & prevented pltf. having access from the stream of the river to the side of his premises, whereby pltf. sustained special damage. The second count was in trover for goods & chattels. Deft. pleaded to the whole declaration, not guilty; & to the second count, that deft. was possessed of a close, & at the time of the alleged conversion was digging upon it a sawpit, & because the goods & chattels, in the second count mentioned, were without the leave & licence of deft. placed on the close by pltf., & "were then so buried in the close, & so embedded in the earth & soil thereof," that, without a little cutting the same, deft. could not dig the sawpit, deft., in such digging necessarily & unavoidably a little cut the said goods & chattels. Replication de injuria. At the trial, it appeared that the premises were situate, & the obstruction took place in the county of Kent. The evidence in support of the second count was, that some timber of pltf.'s being on the close of deft. he removed it, & it having been again placed there, & become embedded in the soil, he directed his workmen to dig a sawpit at the place where the timber was, & in digging the pit, the timber was cut through, & part remained embedded in the soil, & other part was washed away by the river. The judge directed the jury to consider, whether deft. really & bonâ fide intended to make a sawpit, or was merely digging a hole for the purpose of cutting the timber:—Held: the judge misdirected the jury, in telling them to consider with what motive deft. dug the sawpit.—SIMMONS v. LILLYSTONE (1853), 8 Exch. 431; 22 L. SECT. 6.—PUBLIC AND PRIVATE NUISANCES.

66. Public nuisance — What amounts to.] — (1) A bill may be filed to restrain a public nuisance, without making the A.-G. a party, if pltf. sustains special damage from the nuisance.

(2) I conceive that, to constitute a public nuisance, the thing must be such as, in its nature or its consequences, is a nuisance—an injury or a damage, to all persons who come within the sphere of its operation, though it may be so in a greater degree to some, than it is to others. . . . If, however, the thing complained of is such that it is a great nuisance to those who are more immediately within the sphere of its operations, but is no nuisance or inconvenience whatever, or is even advantageous or pleasurable to those who are more removed from it, there, I conceive, it does not come within the meaning of the term public nuisance. . . . A peal of bells may be, & no doubt is, an extreme nuisance, & perhaps an intolerable nuisance to a person who lives within a very few feet or yards of them; but, to a person who lives at a distance from them, although he is within the reach of their sound, so far from its being a nuisance or an inconvenience, it may be a positive pleasure (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—SOLTAU v. DE HELD (1851), 2 Sim. 73. —— —— ——.]—(1) An action of nuisance is different from an action of trespass. An action of trespass is the action which was brought where the body or the land of a person had been invaded. An action of nuisance is the action which was brought where there was no invasion of the property of somebody else, but where the wrong of deft. consisted in so using his own land as to injure his neighbour's (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

(2) The cts. have always been unwilling in these cases of nuisance to hold that every nuisance, apart from the rule de minimis non curat lex, should be a cause of action. On the contrary, in all these cases of nuisance which involve a limitation of a man's right to use his own land, the cts. will not enforce the alleged rights of pltf., unless that which has occurred is a substantial interference with his comfortable or profitable occupation of his dwelling-house, or warehouse, or house of business, as the case may be (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—KINE v. JOLLY, [1905] 1 Ch. 480; 74 L. 80. Steam hammer.]—If the ct. be satisfied of the existence of a nuisance which it has the power to abate or redress, whether the nuisance be public or private, the ct. will exercise its authority without sending the matter to be tried before a jury.

The ct. has still power, even since the passing of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, to direct issues of fact to be tried before a jury; but the ct. will not do so unless the issue be one which the ct. feels itself incompetent to decide, or some inexorable necessity requires that a jury should be resorted to in order to do complete justice.

The ct. must deal with the question of nuisance or no nuisance as it would deal with any other question within its jurisdiction. If the evidence is satisfactory to the mind of the ct., the ct. will at once decide upon it; if not, the ct. will send the matter to a jury.

the use of a steam hammer, which was challenged by R. & others, trustees of a Roman Catholic chapel, as a nuisance, disturbing the congregation in their devotions & interfering with the business of the schools & the comfortable enjoyment of the rectory house.

On bill filed by R. & others to restrain the nuisance, deft. alleged inter alia that the nuisance was a public nuisance, & should have been proceeded against by indictment:—Held: the ct. had jurisdiction on bill filed to give relief: & the ct. accordingly directed an injunction, as well as an inquiry as to damages.—ROSKELL v. WHITWORTH (1871), 19 W. 81. ——.]—The bill prayed that deft. might be restrained from working a steam hammer in such a way as to cause a nuisance or injury to pltf. & his premises. The Master of the Rolls considered that a nuisance was caused by machinery other than the steam hammer, & granted an injunction to restrain deft. from so conducting his works as to cause injury, damage, or annoyance to pltf. as owner or occupier of the premises:—Held: the injunction should be granted in the terms of the prayer in the bill, & decree varied accordingly.—GOOSE v. BEDFORD (1873), 21 W. 83. ——.]—A nuisance by noise, supposing malice to be out of the question, is a question of degree. It is not every occasional & accidental noise more loud or harsh than usual, that will entitle a pltf. to an injunction where the general case of "habitual nuisance" is not satisfactorily proved.

Deft. in Jan. 1865, erected a steam engine in a shed adjoining the stable belonging to pltfs., by which the stable was rendered unfit for horses, & some inconvenience occasioned in pltfs.' dwelling-house. In May, 1875, defts. made some alteration in their machinery, which pltfs. contended increased the noise & vibration, & they accordingly commenced an action for an injunction to restrain defts. from working their machinery so as to occasion a nuisance to pltfs.:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to an injunction restraining defts. from working their machinery so as to occasion a nuisance or injury by vibration to any greater degree than had previously been occasioned up to May, 1875. Semble: the fact that noise & vibration from machinery has never been complained of for more than twenty years, does not deprive a neighbour of his right to prevent any increased noise, even though such increase be slight.—HEATHER v. PARDON (1877), 37 L. The noises made by defts.' carts in the streets might also be put aside. There is some noise occasioned, even in the night hours; but if that stands alone it will not justify the interference of the ct., nor is it a sufficient make weight. In the day time the cart noise is merged in the greater din of the street traffic. There remains then, the charge of nuisance by rattling cans & milk churns inside the dairy co's. premises. Complaint is made, not so much with regard to the placing of the cans & churns in the carts, as in respect of depositing them on the platform & rolling them about. Pltfs. were respectively the leaseholders & the part occupiers of certain residential premises erected in 1886, & which were opposite to defts.' premises. The occupying pltfs. & others of the tenants of pltfs.' premises had been so disturbed by the noise of defts.' carts & the shouts of their drivers & other of defts.' employees between 2 a.m. & 6 a.m. that they were in many cases unable to sleep; & some of pltfs.' tenants had in consequence left & others had threatened to leave: —Held: defts.' business had caused a nuisance by noise so continuous & of such a character as to entitle pltfs. to an injunction.—BARTLETT v. MARSHALL (1896), 60 J. 111. ——.]—Where a man, by an act on his own land, such as burning bricks, causes so much annoyance to another in the enjoyment of a neighbouring tenement as to amount primâ facie to a cause of action, it is no answer that the act was done in a proper & convenient spot, & was a reasonable use of the land. The fitness of the locality does not prevent the carrying on of an offensive, though lawful, trade from being an actionable nuisance; but whenever, taking all the circumstances into consideration, including the nature & extent of pltf.'s enjoyment before the acts complained of, the annoyance is sufficiently great to amount to a nuisance, an action will lie whatever the locality may be.

I do not think that the nuisance for which an action will lie is capable of any legal definition which will be applicable to all cases & useful in deciding them. The question so entirely depends on the surrounding circumstances, the place where, the time when, the alleged nuisance, what the mode of committing it, how, & the duration of it, whether temporary or permanent, occasional or continual, as to make it impossible to lay down any rule of law applicable to every case & which also will be useful in assisting a jury to come to a satisfactory conclusion, it must at all times be a question of fact with reference to all the circumstances of the case (POLLOCK, C.B.).—BAMFORD v. TURNLEY (1862), 3 B. & S. 66; 31 L. 114. ——.]—In order to constitute a nuisance there must be, not merely a nominal, but such a sensible & real damage as a sensible person, if subjected to it, would find injurious, regard being had to the situation & mode of occupation of the property injured.

Semble: if a man builds a rolling mill close to inhabited cottages, so that the vibration produced by the hammers cracks the walls of the cottages, & the noise of the mill causes them to become & remain uninhabited, he cannot justify these injuries, on the ground that they were caused by him in the reasonable & proper exercise of his trade in a reasonable & proper place.—SCOTT v. FIRTH (1864), 4 F. & F 349; 10 L. 115. ——.]—Where no right by prescription exists to carry on a particular trade, the fact that the locality where it is carried on is one generally employed for the purpose of that & similar trades, will not exempt the person carrying it on from liability to an action for damages, in respect of injury created by it to property in the neighbourhood.

A. brought an action against B. for injury done to the trees, shrubs, etc., on his, A.'s, land by the vapours, etc., exhaling from B.'s smelting works. The jury found that A.'s property had been injured by such vapours, etc:—Held: B. was liable for this injury, notwithstanding the fact that the smelting was an ordinary business carried on in a proper way & in as good a manner as possible, & there were many other manufactories in the neighbourhood, & the whole district around A.'s land was more or less injured by the vapours, etc., from such manufactories.

It is a very desirable thing to mark the difference between an action brought for a nuisance, upon the ground that the alleged nuisance produces material injury to the property, & an action brought for a nuisance on the ground that the thing alleged to be a nuisance is productive of sensible personal discomfort. With regard to the latter, namely, the personal inconvenience & interference with one's enjoyment, one's quiet, one's personal freedom, anything that discomposes or injuriously affects the senses or the nerves, whether that may or may not be denominated a nuisance must undoubtedly depend greatly on the circumstances where the thing complained of actually occurs. If a man lives in a town, of necessity he should submit himself to the consequence of those obligations of trade which may be carried on in his immediate locality, which are actually necessary for trade & commerce, also for the enjoyment of property & for the benefit of the inhabitants of the town & of the public at large. If a man lives in a street where there are numerous shops, & a shop is opened next door to him, which is carried on in a fair & reasonable way, he has no ground for complaint, because to himself individually there may arise much discomfort from the trade carried on in that shop; but when an occupation is carried on by one person in the neighbourhood of another, & the result of that trade, or occupation, or business is material injury, then unquestionably, arises a very different consideration; & I think that in a case of that description, the submission which is required from persons living in society to that amount of discomfort which may be necessary for the legitimate & free exercise of the trade of their neighbours, would not apply to circumstances, the immediate result of which is sensible injury to the value of the property. . . . The word "suitable" unquestionably cannot carry with it this consequence —that a trade may be carried on in a particular locality the consequence of which trade may be injury & destruction to the neighbouring property (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

Everything must be looked to from a reasonable point of view: therefore the law does not regard trifling & small inconveniences but only regards sensible inconveniences which sensibly diminish the comfort, enjoyment or value of the property which is affected (LORD WENSLEYDALE.).—ST. 130. ———.] — By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 112, "Any person who . . . establishes" an offensive trade in a district without the written consent of the urban authority is liable to a penalty. In 1911 by an order of the local authority the trade of rag & bone dealer was duly declared an offensive trade within the sect. In 1908, before the making of the above order, which consequently did not apply to him, applt. had established the trade of a rag & bone dealer in certain premises, & continued to carry it on until Aug. 1918, when he let the premises on a yearly tenancy to J., who carried on the same trade there for nearly two years, but did not purchase the goodwill. Applt. then resumed possession of the premises & carried on the same business thereon in Sept. 1920. He was convicted of establishing the trade without the permission of the urban authority within Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 112:—Held : on resuming the trade applt. did not "establish" it within the meaning of the sect., but that he had established it in 1908. 184. Right to purity of air.]—WALTER v. SELFE, No. 1, ante.

185. ——.]—(1) Every man has a natural right to enjoy the air pure & free from noxious smells or vapours, & any one who sends on his neighbour's land that which makes the air impure is guilty of a nuisance. But a man must not impose an obligation on his neighbour by having a want of proper ventilation on his own premises.

(2) An interference with light or air which is not otherwise actionable cannot be restrained on the ground of nuisance.

(3) Unless the right to have a free passage of air over the land of another has been acquired by lapse of time, the mere diminution of quantity is not a nuisance at law.

213. Tuberculosis hospital.]—By a lease dated Feb. 18, 1887, H., the tenant for life in possession of a settled estate, demised to deft. T., a parcel of land at Newport, Monmouthshire, on which Cardigan House was built, for a term of ninety-nine years, with a covenant by the lessee not to exercise or carry on upon the demised premises any noisy, noisome, or offensive trade or business, or do or suffer to be done, anything which might be hazardous or noisome or injurious, or offensive to the lessor or his property or any of his tenants. Other similar building leases with identical covenants were granted according to a building scheme applicable to part of the estate. By a deed dated Aug. 2, 1889, H. & his trustees conveyed the site of Cardigan House, subject to the existing lease, to W. in fee, & she covenanted with H. to the intent that the burden of the covenant might run with the premises, that she, her heirs, & assigns, would not at any time thereafter permit the premises to be used for the purpose of any trade or business or otherwise than as a private dwelling-house. On Apr. 14, 1893, W. conveyed & released the site of Cardigan House to T. subject to the lease of Feb. 18, 1887, but to the intent that the term thereby created might be thenceforth absolutely merged in the reversion, & T. covenanted to indemnify W. against the covenants in the conveyance of 1889. In Jan. 1915, T. offered Cardigan House to deft. assocn., & it was subsequently opened as a children's hospital for surgical tuberculosis.

In an action by H. & others entitled to freehold & leasehold interests in houses in the vicinity, alleging breaches of covenants by reason of sights, noise, smells, & risk of infection to the neighbourhood, & asking for an injunction to restrain defts. from using the house for the purpose of a hospital so as to cause a nuisance, or from using the premises "otherwise than as a private dwelling-house" or in breach of the covenants in the lease of 1887: —Held: (1) the carrying on of a properly equipped & well managed establishment, such as the hospital was proved to be, was not per se a noisy, noisome, or offensive business. (2) On the evidence, & in particular upon the ground that the medical evidence was unanimous & unshaken to the effect that the hospital was not a source of danger to the neighbourhood & that there was no risk of infection, the action failed as to the alleged breaches of the covenant in the lease of 1887, & also as to the alleged nuisance at common law. —FROST v. KING EDWARD VII. 215. ——.]—Defts. were convicted on a count of an indictment which charged that they unlawfully, knowingly & wilfully did deposit in a warehouse belonging to them near to divers streets & highways & to divers dwelling houses of her Majesty's subjects, divers large & excessive quantities of a dangerous ignitable & explosive fluid called wood naptha, & did keep in the warehouse & near to the streets, highways & dwelling houses the fluid in such large, excessive & dangerous quantities, whereby the Queen's subjects passing along the streets & highways, & residing in the dwelling houses were in great danger of their lives & property & were kept in great alarm & terror ad commune nocumentum.

It appeared in evidence that naptha is very inflammable &, if inflamed, water could not put out the fire, unless applied in enormous quantities, & that a fire arising & communicating with the quantity kept upon defts.' premises could not be quenched, & would produce very disastrous consequences to the neighbourhood. It also appeared that it was the practice never to allow any candles, fire or gas light to be in the warehouse, & that so long as that continued the naptha would not produce danger:—Held: the jury were entitled to take into consideration the liability to ignition ab extra; it was a question for the jury, whether the keeping & depositing did create danger to life & property as alleged; &, although the judge would not have been justified in directing a verdict of guilty without taking the opinion of the jury upon it, he was fully justified in telling the jury, that if the depositing & keeping the naptha, coupled with its liability to ignition ab extra, created danger to life & property to the degree alleged, they might find a verdict of guilty.—R. v. LISTER & BIGGS (1857), Dears. & B. 209; 26 L. A town council of a borough made a bye-law that if any butcher or dealer in meat, or any fishmonger, poulterer or other person shall expose or offer for sale on his premises or have in his possession with intent to sell or expose for sale, any meat fish poultry or other victuals or provisions unfit for the food of man, he shall be subject to a penalty to be recovered before justices who shall decide on the unfitness. Applt., a grocer, exposed for sale on his premises cheese which the justices held was unfit for food, & convicted him accordingly:—Held: to expose for sale, or to have possession of, with intent to sell, things unfit for food, was a nuisance at common law, consequently the bye-law was within the powers of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 90, & the applt. was within the bye-law.—SHILLITO v. THOMPSON (1875), 1 Q. In an action by the A.-G. at the relation of the vestry of the parish:—Held: it was a common law duty of the owner of the piece of land to prevent it from being so used as to be a public nuisance; & the A.-G. was entitled to an injunction to enforce the performance of that duty.—A.-G. v. TOD HEATLEY, [1897] 1 Ch. 560; 66 L. 222. —— —— Seaside encampment.]—Defts. erected certain bungalows on low lying land near the sea wall at Birkenhead. These bungalows were erected without the consent & not in conformity with the bye-laws of pltf. council. After nineteen bungalows had been erected the council obtained an undertaking from defts. to take them down if required. Other bungalows were subsequently erected but on similar terms as to being taken down. The land lay on sandy soil below the level of the tide, & no drainage system was practicable. Eventually some seventy four bungalows were erected & occupied. Tents were also erected. Complaints having been made with regard to the use to which the land was put by some residents in the parish—the complaints being more as to the general objectionable conditions under which it was considered the occupants of the farm had to live than as to any question of health, the Local Govt. Board made suggestions to the council as to alteration of the conditions. Deft. K. expressed himself willing to do what was necessary to improve the sanitary conditions. Deft. B. occupied one of the bungalows which was erected in 1907.

In an action by the A.-G. on the relation of the council claiming an injunction to restrain a nuisance & to restrain defts. from maintaining bungalows erected not in accordance with the bye-laws:—Held: (1) although having regard to the number of bungalows on the land their existence there was a matter which was properly inquired into there was no evidence of a nuisance or a danger to public health; (2) although the level of the ground was low the fact that the ground was sandy & porous. & it contained a sufficient quantity of good soil to deodorise fæcal matter rendered it unobjectionable.—A.-G. v. KERR & BALL (1914), 79 J. 223. Watching or besetting.]—(1) To watch or beset a man's house, with the view to compel him to do or not to do that which it is lawful for him not to do or to do, is, unless some reasonable justification for it is consistent with the evidence, a wrongful act: (a) because it is an offence within Conspiracy & Protection of Property Act, 1875 (c. 86), s. 7, & (b) because it is a nuisance at common law for which an action on the case would lie; for such conduct seriously interferes with the ordinary comfort of human existence & the ordinary enjoyment of the house beset.

(2) Proof that the nuisance was caused by an attempt peaceably to persuade other people would afford no defence to such an action; though persons may be peaceably persuaded provided the method employed is not a nuisance.—LYONS (J.) & SONS v. WILKINS, [1899] 1 Ch. 255; 68 L. A. In General.

See Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55): PUBLIC HEALTH.

225. Must be public nuisance — Or private nuisance injurious to health.]—By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 8, the word nuisances shall include any premises in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health. Applts. were the owners of a railway bridge over a highway. The rain water collected on the bridge, & running through the planks, dripped on to the highway & on persons using the highway. Applts. were summoned, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12, for allowing a nuisance to exist on their premises, & the justices ordered its abatement:—Held: 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, being a sanitary Act, applied only to such nuisances as were injurious to health; & as the nuisance complained of was not injurious to health, the justices were wrong in ordering its abatement.

The Act speaks of nuisances or things injurious to health, & I think that the distinction taken . . . is the true one, that it was intended for the benefit of public health or health generally, to secure the means of abating things that were either matters of public or private nuisance, of public nuisance as coming within the word "nuisance," & private nuisance as coming within the words "injurious to health" (COCKBURN, C.J.).—GREAT WESTERN RY. 232. Circumstances attending discovery—Whether jurisdiction of magistrate affected.]—The circumstances under which a nuisance within the meaning of the nuisance clauses of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), has been discovered do not affect the jurisdiction of a ct. of summary jurisdiction to deal with the nuisance when it has in fact been discovered.

On summary proceedings under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), in respect of an alleged nuisance due to the condition of a drain, the magistrate found that there was on the premises in question a leaking drain, which he held to be a nuisance within the meaning of Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76):—Held: as the magistrate had found that the drain was leaking & not merely leaky his decision must be upheld.

Semble: a defective drain is not in itself a nuisance within the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), but that to establish the existence of a nuisance in such a case, it must be shown that the defect leads to evil consequences.—FARMER v. LONG (1907), 72 J. P. 91; 6 L. G. R. 368, D. C.

234. Premises decayed, dilapidated, or out of order—Nuisance arising from sewage works.]—(1) The provisions of Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 91–96, for the abatement of certain nuisances, do not apply to a nuisance arising from sewage tanks & works constructed under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 27, by a local board of health, & a ct. of summary jurisdiction has, therefore, no power, on proof of a nuisance so caused, to make an order for the abatement of such nuisance under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 96.

(2) It is clear that the expression premises in such a state as to be a nuisance has not the wide application claimed for it by resps. . . . but we think it is confined to cases in which the premises themselves are decayed, dilapidated, dirty, or out of order, as, for instance, where houses have been inhabited by tenants whose habits & ways of life have rendered them filthy or impregnated with disease, or where foul matter has been allowed to soak into walls or floors, or where they are so dilapidated as to be a source of danger to life & limb (WILLS, J.).—R. v. PARLBY (1889), 22 Q. On the first floor there were a small range in a room used as a bedroom, & a gas stove on the landing, & they were in good repair & could be used for cooking, both floors being let to the same tenant. On a complaint against applt. under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 5 (1), the magistrate held that the tenant should not be compelled to turn his bed-

243. " House "—Building used as night shelter for destitute—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76).]—A building, belonging to the trustees of a religious assocn., & used for purposes of religious service in the daytime, was used at night as a shelter for the homeless & destitute poor. It contained no sleeping accommodation, but the persons admitted slept on the chairs used to seat the congregations or on the bare floor :—Held : it was a house within Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 2 (1) (e).

Orders as to the number of persons to be admitted were given by the superintendent of the philanthropic work of the religious association to the caretaker of the building, apparently on his own responsibility :—Held : the superintendent was the person by whose act, default, or sufferance, a nuisance consisting in the overcrowding of the building at night arose.—R. v. MEAD, Ex p. GATES (1895), 64 L. to send forth black smoke from their chimney, so that the same should be no longer a nuisance. The order having been persistently disregarded, & the offenders summoned & a penalty imposed on them, under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 14, for their default, nineteen separate informations were eventually laid, & the same number of summonses simultaneously issued, in respect of as many acts of disobedience, each committed on a different day, by sending forth black smoke. At the hearing of the summonses, the full penalty of 10*s.* was imposed for the offence alleged in each, & the offenders were ordered also to pay 15*s.* costs upon the first summons, & 16*s.* costs upon every other. They objected that their disobedience was but one default, & that the divers acts complained of should have been charged in a single summons, to which one set of costs only would have attached; & they obtained a rule calling on the justices to show cause why they should not state a case under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857 (c. 43):—Held: each daily emission of smoke was a separate act of disobedience, for which a separate summons might be lawfully issued, & under the circumstances the justices had not so exercised their discretion in awarding costs as to render the interference of the ct. necessary.—R. v. WATERHOUSE (1872), L. 256. Factory having several chimneys—Summons not specifying which complained of.]—B. charged N. that black smoke issued from certain chimneys on his premises so as to be a nuisance, & this was caused by the act & default of N. The fact was that there were five separate chimneys together, each used for a separate purpose. N. objected that the summons was bad for not showing from which of the chimneys was said to issue the smoke:—Held: the justices were wrong in allowing this objection to the summons, & they ought to have heard the evidence & made their order as to one or more of the chimneys.—BARNES v. NORRIS (1876), 41 J. P. 150.

257. Construction of furnace as defence—When available under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 91 (7).]—An information was laid against the proprietor of a brewery, for that black smoke was from time to time sent forth from the chimney of his brewery in such quantities as to be a nuisance, & he was convicted & fined thereon:—Held: the proviso [of above sub-sect.] applied only to the first part of above sub-sect., & not to the latter part making it an offence to send forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance, & deft. was not entitled to call evidence as to the construction of the furnace.—WEEKES v. KING (1885), 53 L. 258. Recurrence of nuisance after order to abate—Presumption that previous order complied with—Lapse of time.]—Applts. gave notice to resp. on Mar. 18, 1904, under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4, forthwith to abate & within the like period to prevent the recurrence of a nuisance consisting of black smoke issuing from the chimney of a bakehouse. No further nuisance was observed till Jan. 5, 1906, when the chimney was seen to send forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance. Applt's. thereupon summoned resp. for making default in complying with the notice of Mar. 18, 1904. The magistrate held upon the evidence that it must be assumed that immediately on receipt of the notice the nuisance was abated, & he dismissed the summons:—Held: as it was open to the magistrate to hold that the two occurrences were not connected with one another, his decision was right.—BATTERSEA BOROUGH COUNCIL v. GOERG (1906), 71 J. 259. —— —— ——.]—A sanitary authority being satisfied that a nuisance existed at an electric power station of the London County Council by reason of a chimney of the power station sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance, upon Nov. 6, 1910, served on the county council a notice under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4, requiring them within three days to abate the nuisance & to execute such works as were necessary to prevent its recurrence. Similar nuisances occurred in Mar. 1911, & on Apr. 9, the chimney sent forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance. A summons was then taken out by the authority under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4 (4), against the County Council for having made default in complying with the requirements of the statutory notice served on them on Nov. 6, & the magistrate having found as a fact that the nuisance of Apr. 9 was a recrudescence & not a continuance of the nuisance which the notice required the Council to abate, determined that the Council had not made default in complying with the notice, & he dismissed the summons:—Held: there was sufficient evidence to justify the magistrate in finding that the nuisance of Apr. 9, 1911, was a separate & independent occurrence & not a recurrence of the first nuisance, & there had not been a failure to comply with the statutory notice to abate the earlier nuisance.—GREENWICH BOROUGH COUNCIL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (1912), 106 L. In the basement were cooking ranges, a large roasting grate, & a vertical boiler with furnace attached, which latter were used for heating the premises; the smoke from all of them was discharged into one flue or chimney, which sent forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance. Extent of exemption—Confined to nuisances.]—The Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), imposes on landowners, through whose land a sewer is run under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), an obligation to preserve to such sewer subjacent support, & gives them a right to immediate compensation for being deprived of free power to work subjacent mines, but not for the risk of percolation of sewage into the subjacent mines.

Sect. 334 of Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), which provides that nothing in the Act shall be construed to extend to mines, . . . is confined in its operation to those clauses of the Act which deal with the prevention of nuisances (COTTON, L.J.).—Re DUDLEY CORPN. & DUDLEY'S (EARL) TRUSTEES (1881), 8 Q. The justices found that the smoke from applts.' chimney was a nuisance, & ordered its abatement:—Held: applts. came within the exemption contained in the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 44, of mines, smelting, & the manufacturing of the produce of ores & minerals; these two Acts, being, by Sanitary Act, 1866 (c. 90), s. 14, to be construed as one, the exemption in Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), applied to the nuisances created by Sanitary Act, 1866 (c. 90); & the justices had no jurisdiction to make the order.—NORRIS v. BARNES (1872), L. 271. —— Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 24.]—By above sect. "any chimney, not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house, sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance" is liable to be dealt with summarily:—Held: the funnel of a steam-tug was a chimney within the sect.

An abatement or prohibition order is not bad because it does not, under above Act, sect. 5, sub-sect. 5, specify the works to be executed for the purpose of abating or preventing the recurrence of the nuisance, although the person on whom the order is made may have required them to be specified.—TOUGH v. HOPKINS, [1904] 1 K. 272. Trading direct from Liverpool to foreign ports—Liverpool Sanitary Amendment Act, 1854 (c. xv), s. 24.]—Above sect., which relates to the emission of smoke, does not apply to steam vessels trading direct with foreign ports, even although smoke is negligently emitted when the steam vessel is within the port of Liverpool.—MACAULAY v. MOSS S.S. 273. Whether injury to health essential.]—Where a chimney, not belonging to a private house, sends forth black smoke so as to be a nuisance, it is not necessary, in proceedings to abate it, to prove that the smoke is injurious to health.—GASKELL v. BAYLEY (1874), 30 L. T. 516; 38 J. P. 805.

274. No evidence of injury to particular person or property.]—Upon the hearing of complaints under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 24 (b), it was proved that black smoke issued from a chimney several times a day during a series of days for periods varying from a few minutes to upwards of an hour:—Held: upon these facts the magistrate was justified in finding that the smoke issued in such quantity "as to be a nuisance," although there was no evidence that any particular person or property was injuriously affected thereby.—SOUTH LONDON ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPN. v. PERRIN, [1901] 2 K. 275. Whether master liable.]—A local improvement Act enacted that every furnace used shall be constructed so as to consume its own smoke, & if any person use a furnace not so constructed, or shall use such furnace so negligently that the smoke shall not be consumed, every person so offending, being the owner or occupier, or being a foreman or other person employed by such owner or occupier, shall forfeit a sum of £5, etc.

W., the owner, used furnaces properly constructed, & employed a competent person to use them, but, without W.'s knowledge, the servant negligently used them so that smoke was not consumed:—Held: the servant only could be convicted of the offence, & not the master.—WILLCOCK v. SANDS (1868), 32 J. P. 565.

276. ——.]—By Sanitary Act, 1866 (c. 90), s. 19, the word "nuisances," under Nuisance Removal Acts, shall include any chimney, not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house, sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance:—Held: in the event of such a nuisance existing, the occupier of the premises is liable to be charged & to have an order made upon him for the abatement of the nuisance, although it may have arisen or have been continued by the act of a servant employed by him upon the premises.—BARNES v. AKROYD (1872), L. The furnace in question was constructed so as to consume its own smoke if carefully used, & the emission of smoke complained of was caused by the carelessness of the stoker employed by deft. to attend to the furnace. Deft. was not personally guilty of any negligence in connection with the matter:—Held: deft. was not criminally responsible for the negligence of his servant, & could not be convicted of the offence.—CHISHOLM v. DOULTON (1889), 22 Q. The furnace was properly constructed & efficient firemen superintended, & the stoker's own negligence was the sole cause of the smoke. 279. ——.]—Applts. were the owners & the occupiers of a dyehouse which had a furnace & a chimney appertaining thereto. In consequence of negligent stoking on the part of one of the servants of applts., of which applts. were ignorant, smoke which was not completely burned was allowed to escape from the chimney of the dyehouse:—Held: applts. were rightly convicted of an offence under Bradford Corporation Act, 1910 (c. cxvii), s. 52.—ARMITAGE, LTD. v. NICHOLSON (1913), 108 L. 280. ——.]—Upon the hearing of an information under Bradford Corporation Act (c. cxvii), s. 53, an expert witness gave evidence that the emission of the smoke could not have been caused otherwise than by means of some act or default of the stokers or engineer:—Held: (1) the justices were not bound to accept this evidence as conclusive, but were entitled to exercise their own judgment, upon the whole of the evidence & to convict defts.; (2) the burden of showing that they came within the exemption in Bradford Corporation Act, 1913 (c. xcvi), s. 72 (3), lay upon defts.—DRUMMOND & SONS v. NICHOLSON (1915), 84 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—UNDER STATUTES INFLICTING PENALTIES.

A. In General.

281. Consumption by trade furnaces — "Consume as far as possible"—Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 34), s. 108.]—Above sect. imposes a penalty on persons so negligently using a furnace as not to "consume the smoke" arising from it. A local Act incorporates above sect., but provides that the words "consume the smoke" shall not be in all cases read as "consume all the smoke"; & that the penalty may be remitted if the person summoned under that sect. has so constructed or altered his furnace as to consume as far as possible its smoke, "& has carefully attended to the same, & consumed as far as possible" its smoke. On an information against applt. for so negligently using his furnace as not to consume its smoke, it was not shown that the furnace was improperly constructed; it was found that it was capable of consuming more smoke than it in fact did; but that to use the means provided for that purpose would render it impossible to carry on applt.'s trade with that furnace. Applt. was convicted:—Held: assuming the furnace to be properly constructed, "as far as possible" meant as far as possible consistently with carrying on the trade in which the furnace was employed; & applt. was wrongly convicted.—COOPER v. WOOLLEY (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 88; 36 L. J. M. C. 27; 15 L. T. 539; 31 J. P. 135; 15 W. R.

B. On Highways.

See, generally, Highways & Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (c. 77), s. 30; Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (c. 36), s. 1; Motor Car Act, 1903 (c. 36).

282. Steam engine—Onus of proof.]—All that prosecutor had to prove was that, in fact, the engine was emitting smoke & did not consume its own smoke, which throws the onus on deft. (GRANTHAM, J.).—PITT RIVERS v. GLASSE (1891), 55 J. P. 663; 7 T. L. R. 438, D. C.

283. Exemption of light locomotives—Emission only from temporary cause—Motor car.]—Where the emission of smoke from a motor car is due to carelessness, that does not prevent the car from coming within the provisions of Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (c. 36), s. 1.—R. v. WILHAHAM, Ex p. ROWCLIFFE (1907), 96 L. 284. —— —— Motor bus.]—Applts. were summoned under Highways & Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (c. 77), s. 30, for using on a highway a locomotive which did not consume so far as practicable its own smoke. The locomotive belonged to applts., & was a petrol motor omnibus weighing less than five tons. It had a smokeless engine, but it was seen by respt. to emit considerable quantities of smoke which smelt of burnt oil. This was caused by the negligence of applts.' driver in supplying an excessive quantity of lubricating oil to the working parts. The magistrate found as a fact that the omnibus was so constructed that no smoke or visible vapour could be emitted therefrom except by reason of the driver's negligence:—Held: as the motor omnibus weighed less than five tons, & was so constructed that no smoke or vapour was emitted therefrom except from any temporary cause, it was exempted by Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (c. 36), s. 1, as varied by Art. III. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, from the operation of Highways & Locomotives Act, 1878 (c. 77), s. 30, &, therefore, applts. had committed no offence against the sect. under which they were summoned.—STAR OMNIBUS CO. (LONDON), LTD. v. TAGG (1907), 97 L. T. 481; 71 J. P. 352; 23 T. L. R. 488; 51 Sol. Jo. 467; 5 L. G. R. 808; 21 Cox, C. C. 519, D. C.

285. —— —— Motor engines.]—Applts. were summoned under Highways & Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (c. 77), s. 30, for respectively using on a highway two motor engines which did not so far as practicable consume their own smoke. It was proved that on the highway the motor engines had emitted an excessive quantity of smoke & steam while they were respectively in charge of applts. Evidence was given on behalf of applts. that the engines were so constructed that no smoke or visible vapour was emitted therefrom except from some temporary or accidental cause. This evidence was not contradicted on the part of resp. The justices were of opinion that the emission of smoke & steam was due, not only to the carelessness of applts., but also to the fact that on the occasion in question the engines did not so far as practicable consume their own smoke, & they were not satisfied that the emission was due to a temporary or accidental cause within Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (c. 36), s 1:—Held: as the justices had not found upon the evidence that the locomotives were so constructed that no smoke would be emitted except from a temporary or accidental cause, they did not come within the exemption contained in Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (c. 36), s. 1, & applts. were rightly convicted.—HINDLE & PALMER v. NOBLETT (1908), 99 L. 286. Tramway engine—Mixed smoke & steam.]—D. was charged with emitting smoke & steam, contrary to bye-laws, from a tramway engine, & contended that these were two separate offences, & the summons was contrary to Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1847 (c. 43):—Held: the justices

e. —— —— ——.]—To prove the nuisance defined in Public Health Act, 1867, s. 16 (h), a furnace must be shown not to consume its own smoke either by reason of faulty construction, or by reason of systematic misuse, & the fact that a well constructed furnace had on ten occasions in a period of four months sent out quantities of offensive black smoke held not to be evidence of such systematic misuse as to bring it under the terms of that Act.—DUMFRIES LOCAL AUTHORITY v. MURPHY (1884), 11 R. f. —— —— ——.]—Held: the fact that the furnace of the boiler of a steam engine in certain engineering works was not fitted with any of the systems for mechanical stoking, which have among their objects improved smoke consumption, did not make the furnace a nuisance within Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, s. 16 (9), mechanical stoking as contrasted with stoking by hand being unsuitable for the business in question.—LEITH MAGISTRATES v. BERTRAM (JAMES) & SON, LTD., [1915] S. 288. Regatta.]—A railway co. became, by conveyance from a canal co., the owner of a canal, with lands acquired from several owners for the formation of a reservoir, from which to supply water to the canal, the rights of fishing & sporting over the reservoir, & for no other purpose, being reserved to the former owners. The co. projected & held a regatta with aquatic sports on the reservoir, they ran cheap trains, & thereby congregated a large concourse of persons, who trespassed on the park surrounding the mansion house of a lady & adjoining the reservoir, & injured her right of fishing & sporting over the greater part of the reservoir. Notwithstanding the remonstrances of the lady, the co. announced a second regatta. Upon motion on behalf of the lady in a suit by her against the co., the latter undertaking not to hold another regatta for a limited period, the ct. permitted pltf. to try her right at law against the co. On a trial at law the jury, not agreeing, were discharged; but, on a second trial, a verdict was given for pltf., with nominal damages. Their undertaking having expired, the co. announced another regatta on the reservoir. Pltf. again moved for an injunction:—Held: the regatta was a nuisance to pltf.'s property, & an injunction was granted to restrain them from holding the regatta; & the ct. directed an issue to try whether the co. could use the reservoir for any other purpose than to supply their canal with water.—BOSTOCK v. NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. 289. Fireworks.]—The collection of a crowd of noisy & disorderly people, to the annoyance of the neighbourhood, outside grounds in which entertainments with music & fireworks are being given for profit, is a nuisance for which the giver of the entertainments is liable to an injunction; even though he has excluded all improper characters from the grounds, & the amusements within the grounds have been conducted in an orderly way, to the satisfaction of the police. Semble: letting off rockets & establishing a powerful band of music which plays twice a week for several hours continuously within one hundred yards of a dwelling-house, are nuisances which this ct. will restrain.—WALKER v. BREWSTER (1867), L. 290. Circus.]—(1) A circus, the performances in which were to be carried on for eight weeks, was erected near pltf.'s house, & the performances, which took place every evening, lasted from about 7.30 p.m. till 10.30 p.m. It was proved that the noise of the music & shouting in the circus could be distinctly heard all over pltf.'s house, & was so loud that it could be heard above the conversation in the dining-room though the windows & shutters were closed, & several persons were talking in the room:—Held: this was such a nuisance as the ct. would restrain by injunction.

(2) No doubt the drawing crowds together may be a nuisance; but all the circumstances have to be considered (SELWYN, L. J.).

(3) One circumstance which has been much urged is, that pltf. is only a yearly tenant. Pltf. did not allege any right of property in a particular pew, but did allege that he was a parishioner, & that he was in the habit of attending divine service in the parish church. Qu.: whether this is a private nuisance & whether such a bill can be sustained by a single parishioner against the churchwardens.

Pltf. complained of works intended to be executed by defts., churchwardens of his parish, which he alleged, in the way in which it was proposed to execute them, constituted a nuisance; much negotiation took place, in the course of which defts. showed a continued acquiescence in the suggestions made by pltf. as to the mode of executing the works, & suspended their execution. While these negotiations were still going on, & before any works were commenced, pltf. filed his bill for an injunction, & obtained special leave to give notice of motion & served the notice of motion. On the day following the service of the notice of motion, defts. in order to avoid litigation passed a resolution at a vestry, at which pltf. was present, that the works should be wholly abandoned. 310. ——.]—Pltfs. were incorporated under a local Act for protecting Canvey Island in Essex from inundation by the sea. They succeeded former comrs. appointed by an Act of 1792, which contained a power for these comrs. to erect a new sea wall further inward, on giving compensation to the owner whose land was taken for this purpose. In 1813 the new wall, 4,300 feet in length, was built, & £150 given as compensation to the owner of the land taken. Under the local Act the property & rights of the former comrs. were vested in pltfs. who had power under that Act to hold lands. Pltfs. claimed to be owners in possession of the foreshore between the new & the old wall. Deft. claimed under a conveyance of Apr. 1919, to be the freeholder in possession of a strip of land comprising part of this foreshore, & to be entitled as of right, to excavate & remove shells & other drift even although, as pltfs. alleged, it deprived the new wall of protection & support, & exposed it to injury by the action of wind & water. The greater risk to the wall in consequence of deft.'s action was established by the evidence. In an action by pltfs. to restrain deft. from so removing the drift, & from trespassing on the land :—Held : (1) assuming the strip in question to be deft.'s freehold, pltfs. were still entitled to an injunction restraining him from so removing drift from the strip as to expose their wall & works & the lands protected thereby to greater risk of inundations of the sea ; (2) pltfs. had established their statutory title under the Act of 1792 & the local Act to the whole of the land taken & set out pursuant to the first Act, & had exercised specific acts of ownership over the foreshore. The possession of pltfs. & of deft. being at most doubtful or equivocal the law attached possession to the title ; (3) deft. was a trespasser, & must be restrained from excavating or removing stones, shingle, shell or soil from the particular strip of foreshore & from otherwise trespassing on the same.—CANVEY ISLAND COMRS. v. PREEDY, [1922] 1 Ch. 179 ; 91 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—PRINCIPLE OF RYLANDS V. FLETCHER.

A. In General.

311. Absolute liability for non-natural user of property.]—A. was the lessee of mines. B. was the owner of a mill standing on land adjoining that under which the mines were worked. B. desired to construct a reservoir, & employed competent persons, an engineer & a contractor, to construct it. A. had worked his mines up to a spot where there were certain old passages of disused mines ; these passages were connected with vertical shafts which communicated with the land above, & which had also been out of use for years, & were apparently filled with marl & the earth of the surrounding land. No care was taken by the engineer or the contractor to block up these shafts, & shortly after water had been introduced into the reservoir it broke through some of the shafts, flowed through the old passages & flooded A.'s mine :—Held : A. was entitled to recover damages from B. in respect of this injury.

Defts., treating them as the owners or occupiers of the close on which the reservoir was constructed, might lawfully have used that close for any purpose for which it might in the ordinary course of the enjoyment of land be used ; & if, in what I may term the natural user of that land, there had been any accumulation of water, either on the surface or underground, & if, by the operation of the laws of nature, that accumulation of water had passed off into the close occupied by pltf., pltf. could not have complained that that result had taken place. . . .

If defts., not stopping at the natural use of their close, had desired to use it for any purpose which I may term a non-natural use, for the purpose of introducing into the close that which in its natural condition was not in or upon it, for the purpose of introducing water either above or below ground in quantities & in a manner not the result of any work or operation on or under the land, & if in consequence of their doing so, or in consequence of any imperfection in the mode of their doing so, the water came to escape & to pass off into the close of pltf., then it appears to me that that which defts. were doing they were doing at their own peril ; &, if in the course of their doing it, the evil arose to which I have referred, the evil, namely, of the escape of the water & its passing away to the close of pltf. & injuring pltf., then for the consequence of that, in my opinion, defts. would be liable.

. . . The same result is arrived at on the principles, referred to by BLACKBURN, J., in his judgment, in the Ct. of Exch., where he states the opinion of that Ct. as to the law in these words : " We think that the true rule of law is, that the person who, for his own purposes, brings on his land & collects & keeps there anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril ; & if he does not do so, is primâ facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape. He can excuse himself by showing that the escape was owing to pltf.'s default ; or, perhaps, that the escape was the consequence of vis major, or the act of God ; but as nothing of this sort exists here, it is unnecessary to inquire what excuse would be sufficient. The general rule, as above stated, seems on principle just. The person whose grass or corn is eaten down by the escaping cattle of his neighbour, or whose mine is flooded by the water from his neighbour's reservoir, or whose cellar is invaded by the filth of his neighbour's privy, or whose habitation is made unhealthy by the fumes & noisome vapours of his neighbour's alkali works, is damnified without any fault of his own; & it seems but reasonable & just that the neighbour who has brought something on his own property, which was not naturally there, harmless to others so long as it is confined to his own property, but which he knows will be mischievous if it gets on his neighbour's, should be obliged to make good the damage which ensues if he does not succeed in confining it to his own property. But for his act in bringing it there no mischief could have accrued, & it seems but just that he should at his peril keep it there, so that no mischief may accrue, or answer for the natural & anticipated consequence. Upon authority this, we think, is established to be the law, whether the things so brought be beasts, or water, or filth, or stenches (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

For when one person, in managing his own affairs, causes, however innocently, damage to another, it is obviously only just that he should be the party to suffer. He is bound sic uti suo ut non laedat alienum (LORD CRANWORTH).—RYLANDS v. FLETCHER (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330; 37 L. J. Ex. 161; 19 L. T. 220; 33 J. P. 70, H. L.; affg. S. 312. Measure of liability—User of defendant's property.]—SANDERS-CLARK v. GROSVENOR MANSIONS CO., LTD. & D'ALLESSANDRI, No. 204, ante.

313. —— ——.]—The principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, is not inconsistent with the Roman law. It imposes a liability on a proprietor which is measured by the non-natural user of his own property, not by that of his neighbour. It applies to a proprietor who stores electricity on his land if it escapes therefrom & injures a person or the ordinary use of property. It does not apply to the case of injury done to a peculiar trade apparatus unnecessarily so constructed as to be affected by minute currents of the escaping force.

In an action for damages by applt. co. for disturbances in the working of their submarine cable caused by an escape of electricity stored by resps. for the due working of their tramway system:—Held: (1) in regard to that section of the tramway which had not been constructed under statutory authority, Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, did not apply, because the disturbances only resulted when the cable was constructed without certain precautions, which the evidence showed had subsequently secured its immunity; (2) in regard to those sections of the tramway which had been constructed under statutes (Act 22 of 1895 & Act 29 of 1896), the escape of electricity, being a natural incident of the operations legalised thereby, & not resulting from a leak within the meaning of the statutory undertaking or condition, did not impose liability on resps.—EASTERN & SOUTH AFRICAN TELEGRAPH CO. v. CAPE TOWN TRAMWAYS COS., [1902] A. 314. Extent of principle — Whether confined to adjoining owners.]—Pltfs. hired of deft. the ground floor of a warehouse, the upper part of which was occupied by deft. himself. The water from the roof was collected by gutters into a box, from which it was discharged by a pipe into the drains. A hole was made in the box by a rat, through which the water entered the warehouse & wetted pltf.'s goods. Deft. had used reasonable care in examining & seeing to the security of the gutters & the box. In an action by pltfs. against deft. for the damage so caused:—Held: deft. was not liable, either on the ground of an implied contract, or on the ground that he had brought the water to the place from which it entered the warehouse.

The decision in Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, has really no bearing on the case, it referred only to acts of adjoining owners of land (MARTIN, B.).—CARSTAIRS v. TAYLOR (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 217; 40 L. J. Ex. 129; 19 W. R. 723.

315. —— —— Land occupied under licence. Pltfs. were the owners of electric cables which had been laid under certain public streets. Defts. were the owners of hydraulic mains which had been laid under the same streets under statutory powers. These mains burst in four different places, in each case damaging pltfs.' cables. The bursting of the mains was not due to any negligence on the part of defts. Two of the mains which so burst had been laid under a private Act which did not contain the usual clause providing that nothing in the Act should exempt the co. from liability for nuisance. The other two had been laid under a later Act which did contain such a clause. The later Act also provided that the two Acts should be "read & construed together as one Act":—Held: the doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, applies not only to cases in which the dangerous thing has escaped from defts.' land on to pltfs.' land & done damage there, but also to cases in which the site of pltfs.' injury was occupied by him only under a licence & not under any right of property in the soil, & in the absence of statutory authorisation of the nuisance defts. were liable for the damage caused by the bursting of their mains notwithstanding that they had been guilty of no negligence.—CHARING CROSS ELECTRICITY SUPPLY CO. v. HYDRAULIC POWER CO., [1914] 3 K. 316. —— Confined to things dangerous per se.]—A branch of a beech tree growing on deft.'s land overhung a highway at a height of thirty feet above the ground. In fine weather the branch suddenly broke, fell upon pltf.'s vehicle, which was passing along the highway, & damaged it. In an action by pltf. claiming in respect of the damage to his vehicle:—Held: (1) the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, had no application, inasmuch as a tree was not in itself a dangerous thing, & to grow trees was one of the natural uses of the soil; (2) the mere fact that the branch overhung the highway did not make it a nuisance, seeing that it did not obstruct the free passage of the highway, & although the branch proved to be a danger deft. was not liable, inasmuch as he had not created the danger & had no knowledge, actual or imputed, of its existence.—NOBLE v. HARRISON, [1926] 2 K. Sect. 2.—Injury to property: Sub-sect. 2, B. (d)

319. ——.]—No one has a right to use his own land in such a way as to be a nuisance to his neighbour, & therefore if a man puts filth or poisonous matter on his land he must take care that it does not escape so as to poison water which his neighbour has a right to use although his neighbour may have no property in such water at the time it is fouled.

Pltf. & deft. were adjoining landowners & had each a deep well on his own land pltf.'s land being at a lower level than deft.'s. Deft. turned sewage from his house into his well & thus polluted the water that percolated underground from deft.'s to pltf.'s land & consequently the water, which came into pltf.'s well from such percolating water when he used his well by pumping came adulterated with the sewage from deft.'s well:—Held: pltf. had a right of action against deft. for so polluting the source of supply although until pltf. had appropriated it he had no property in the percolating water under his land & although he appropriated such water by the artificial means of pumping.—BALLARD v. TOMLINSON (1885), 29 Ch. D. 115; 54 L. J. Ch. 454; 52 L. T. 942; 49 J. P. 692; 33 W. R. 533; 1 T. L. R. 270, C. A.

320. ——.]—(1) Infringement of the rights of a riparian owner by the pollution of the water of a river opposite his property by sewage, & trespass on his land by the discharging, or allowing to escape, into the river, of sewage which is carried by the wind or current on to the land, constitute a permanent injury entitling the owner, though a reversioner, to maintain an action.

Guardians, who as the sanitary authority, had constructed sewers, were at common law under a duty to dispose of their sewage so as not to interfere with private rights, & a liability to others for injury caused by the escape of the sewage:—Held: this duty & liability were transferred by Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 25, to a rural district council; & the liability was also included in a transfer to an urban district council, by an order of the county council converting the rural into an urban district, of the liabilities attaching to the rural district council.

(2) Anyone who turns fæcal matter or allows fæcal matter collected by him or under his control to escape into a river in such manner or under such conditions that it is carried, whether by the current or the wind, on to his neighbour's land, is guilty of a trespass (PARKES, J.).

(3) It is reasonably certain that a reversioner cannot maintain actions in the nature of trespass, including, I think, actions for infringement of natural rights, arising out of his ownership of land, without alleging & proving injury to the reversion. If the thing complained of is of such a permanent nature that the reversion may be injured, the question of whether the reversion is or is not injured is a question for the jury. I take "permanent" in this connection, to mean such as will continue indefinitely unless something is done to remove it. Thus, a building which infringes ancient lights is permanent within the rule for, though it can be removed before the reversion falls into possession, still it will continue until it be removed. On the other hand, a noisy trade, or the exercise of an alleged right of way, are not in their nature permanent within the rule, for they cease of themselves unless there be some one to continue them (PARKER, J.).—JONES v. LLANRWST URBAN COUNCIL, [1911] 1 Ch. 393; 80 L. 321. Escape of sewage from stables—Artificial mound.]—(1) Deft. was tenant & occupier of a newly erected stable, adjoining & all but touching the flank wall of a house in the suburbs of London, which stable was erected on a mound of made earth at a higher level than the basement of pltf.'s house, & the result was that water, mixed with stable drainage & sewage leaking from a broken soil pipe in the stable yard, oozed through the wall of pltf.'s house, so as to be a nuisance. On a bill filed by pltfs., as owners of the house, for an injunction to restrain the nuisance occasioned by the damp, & also by the noise of the horses kept in the stable:—Held: the occupier of the house should be a party to the suit, inasmuch as the alleged nuisances were of a temporary nature.

(2) It appeared that the damp was due to the circumstance of the stable being erected on made earth, placed there unknown to deft. by some predecessor in title:—Held: an injunction should be granted, for the reason that the possessor of land is responsible for nuisances arising on it, by whatever means occasioned; (3) with regard to the noise, the stable was so situated that the ordinary use of it occasioned an annoyance amounting to a nuisance.

A man is entitled to the comfortable enjoyment of his dwelling-house. If his neighbour makes such a noise as to interfere with the ordinary use & enjoyment of his dwelling-house, so as to cause serious annoyance & disturbance, the occupier of the dwelling-house is entitled to be protected from it. It is no answer to say that deft. is only making a reasonable use of his property (JESSEL, M.R.).—BRODER v. SAILLARD (1876), 2 Ch. D. 692; 45 L. J. Ch. 414; 40 J. P. 644; 24 W. R. 1011.

322. Escape of sewage through old drain—Though existence not known to defendant.]—Pltf. & deft. were respectively occupiers of adjoining houses. An old drain which commenced on deft.'s premises, & thence passed under & received the drainage of several other houses, turned back under deft.'s house, & thence under the cellar of pltf.'s house, & ultimately into a public sewer. The part of the return drain which passed through deft.'s premises being decayed, the sewage escaped & flowing into pltf.'s cellar did damage. Deft. was unaware of the existence of this return drain, & consequently of its want of repair:—Held: deft. was liable for the damage done to pltf.: for deft.'s duty was to keep the sewage which he himself was bound to receive from passing from his own premises to pltf.'s premises otherwise than along the old accustomed channel, & this duty was independent of negligence on his part, & independent of his knowledge or ignorance of the existence of the drain.—HUMPHRIES v. COUSINS (1877), 2 C. P. D. 239; 46 L. J. Q. B. 438; 36 L. T. 180; 41 J. P. 280; 25 W. R. 371; on appeal, 46 L. J. Q. B. at p. 442, C. A.

323. General rule.]—Defts., the owners of a mining property, sunk a shaft by which they tapped the water which had formerly found its way into certain old workings on their own ground, & had thence percolated into pltfs.' mines. Defts. then made a borehole at the bottom of the shaft. It was admitted that the making it was not in due course of mining, but only for the purpose of getting rid of the water. The effect of the borehole was to let off the water into the above-mentioned old workings on defts.' ground, whence it percolated into pltfs.' works in the same way in which it would have done if neither shaft nor boreholes had ever been made:—Held: defts. had not by making a shaft so appropriated the water as to lay themselves under an obligation to keep it from coming upon pltfs.' land, &, as the effect of defts.' operations was not to throw upon pltfs.' land any burden which it had not borne before, pltfs.' case failed.

Where the maxim [sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas] is applied to landed property, it is subject to a certain modification, it being necessary for pltf. to show not only that he has sustained damages, but that deft. has caused it by going beyond what is necessary in order to enable him to have the natural use of his own land. If pltf. only shows that his own land is damaged by deft.'s using his land in the natural manner, he cannot succeed (BRETT, L.J.).—WEST CUMBERLAND IRON & STEEL CO. v. KENYON (1879), 11 Ch. 326. —— Through trench cut by defendant.]—By reason of an unprecedented rainfall a quantity of water was accumulated against one of the sides of defts.' railway embankment, to such an extent as to endanger the embankment, when, in order to protect their embankment, defts. cut trenches in it by which the water flowed through, & went ultimately on to the land of pltf., which was on the opposite side of the embankment & at a lower level, & flooded & injured it to a greater extent than it would have done had the trenches not been cut. In an action for damages for such injury the jury found that the cutting of the trenches was reasonably necessary for the protection of defts.' property, & that it was not done negligently:—Held: though defts. had not brought the water on their land, they had no right to protect their property by transferring the mischief from their own land to that of pltf., & they were therefore liable.—WHALLEY v. LANCASHIRE & YORKSHIRE RY. 332. —— Picric acid.]—In Aug. 1915, F. & P., who were interested in a novel process for making picric acid, a high explosive, from dinitrophenol, D.N.P., entered into an agreement with the Minister of Munitions to manufacture for him picric acid at Rainham, Essex. The contractors as agents for the Minister were to erect works for the purpose, the buildings, plant & machinery to be paid for by the Minister & to remain his property. The Minister was to deliver D.N.P. to the contractors, who were on their sole responsibility & at their risk, to convert it into picric acid at an agreed price. In Sept. 1915, F. & P. entered into an agreement for the tenancy of the land on which the factory was to be established & thereby covenanted not to assign or underlet or part with the possession of the premises without the previous consent of the landlords except to a Govt. Department. In Mar. 1916, a private co. formed by F. & P. for the purpose of acquiring & carrying on the undertaking, entered into agreements with F. & P. for the sale to the co., (a) of the rights of the vendors under their agreement with the Minister of Munitions, & (b) of the benefit of the tenancy agreement & of the buildings erected by the vendors, completion to take place on payment of the consideration, which was never paid. The vendors also agreed to allow the co. to go into & remain in occupation of the premises as tenants until the purchase consideration had been paid, but until payment the co. were to be deemed to be in possession of the premises, machinery & plant as agents for the vendors. F. & P. never obtained the consent of the landlords under the tenancy agreement to the assignment or parting with possession of the premises. The co. carried on the manufacture of explosives on the premises & large quantities of D.N.P. were delivered at the factory by the Minister & were stored there close to other inflammable materials, & as a result an explosion occurred which caused damage to neighbouring property. In an action for damages by the owners against the co. & F. & P.:—Held: (1) the co. were liable on the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, for the damage caused by storing dangerous substances on land of which they were in actual physical possession; (2) F. & P. had not effectively divested themselves of the occupation which they held under the tenancy agreement, & that they also were liable on the same principle as occupiers.—RAINHAM CHEMICAL WORKS, LTD. v. BELVEDERE FISH GUANO CO., [1921] 2 A. 339. —— —— Steam organs & amusements.]—Pltfs. in this action were the trustees of the Bedford Estate, Leeds, & they sought an injunction against the Leeds Corpn. to restrain them from holding a certain annual feast known as Woodhouse Feast, which appeared to have been held on or in the neighbourhood of Woodhouse Moor for the past two hundred years, on the ground that the noise caused by the feast constituted a nuisance. They complained that their property, which adjoined the moor, had depreciated in value owing to the noise caused by switchbacks, shooting galleries, roundabouts, steam organs, etc., brought on to the moor. For defts. it was contended that the feast did not constitute a nuisance. It appeared in evidence that from 1908–1911 defts. leased the conduct of this feast to a contractor, & that during that time protests were lodged by pltfs. against the nuisance thereby occasioned, but it was subsequently agreed that pltfs. should accept compensation in respect of the feasts from 1908–1911 without prejudice to their rights thereafter. In the year 1912 the corpn. wrote to pltfs. threatening to again hold the feast on Woodhouse Moor; whereupon a writ was issued by pltfs. to restrain them by injunction:—Held: on the facts, the feasts from 1908–1911 constituted a nuisance & there must be a declaration to that effect, & the corpn. must pay the costs of the action. With regard to the year 1912, when the corpn. conducted the feast, there was no actionable nuisance which would justify the ct. in granting an injunction.—BEDFORD v. LEEDS CORPN. (1913), 77 J. P. 430.

340. Vibration—Driving in piles.]—In preparing a site for a large building in the heart of the city, defts. drove a very large number of piles into the soil, thereby setting up such a heavy vibration as to cause serious structural damage to an old house belonging to pltfs., with the result that the greater part had to be taken down in compliance with a dangerous structure notice. Pltfs. sued for damages:—Held: (1) the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, as explained in National Telephone Co. v. Baker, No. 372, post, & A.-G. v. Cory Bros., No. 344, post, applied so that even if, as defts. alleged, pltfs.' house was in an abnormally unstable condition, defts. were responsible as insurers for all damage caused by the escape of the vibration they had so created; (2) on the actual facts pltfs.' house though very old was not in such an abnormally unstable condition as to prevent the vibration being treated as an ordinary actionable nuisance.—HOARE & CO. v. MCALPINE, [1923] 1 Ch. 167; 92 L. 343. Motor car—Damage by fire—Application of Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78), s. 86.]—Pltf. occupied rooms over a garage. Part of the garage was let to deft., who kept a motor car there. Deft.'s servant, who had little skill as a chauffeur, having occasion in the course of his employment to move the motor car, started the engine, & from some unexplained cause, & without negligence on the part of the servant, the petrol in the carburettor caught fire. If the servant had promptly turned off the tap leading from the petrol tank to the carburettor, the fire would have harmlessly burnt itself out. But he failed to do this; & the fire spread & burnt the car, the garage, & pltf.'s rooms & furniture. Pltf. brought an action for damages. Deft. pleaded that the fire "accidentally began" within above sect. The judge at the trial found that deft.'s servant was negligent in not promptly turning off the petrol tap:—Held: above Act did not protect a person who brought upon his premises an object likely to do damage if not kept in control, & a motor car ready to start, or such a car in charge of an unskilled chauffeur, was an object of that kind.—MUSGROVE v. PANDELIS, [1919] 2 K. 344. Tipping colliery spoil—Damage by landslide.]—A colliery co., under licence from the owners of the land, deposited debris from their colliery on the slope of a mountain between the years 1908 & 1916 to the amount of many thousand tons. In Aug., 1916, after heavy rain, a landslide took place on the mountain side, injuring houses belonging to a township at the foot of the mountain & imperilling a highway running along the valley. Two actions were brought in respect of the landslide, the first by the A.-G. on the relation of the local authority, against the colliery co. & the owners of the land, & the second by the owners of the land against the colliery co. In the first action the claim was for a declaration that the colliery co. was not entitled to deposit debris on the mountain side so as to threaten injury to the highway & to the tramways on it & to the water mains & sewers underneath it, & that the other defts. were not entitled to allow their land to be so used, & for injunctions accordingly & damages. In the second action the owner of the land claimed an indemnity from the colliery co.:—Held: as it appeared from the evidence that the landslide was caused by the weight of the mass of colliery debris deposited by the co., the case fell within the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, & the colliery co. were liable for any damage caused by the escape of the debris which they had accumulated without evidence of negligence on their part; & as between the co. & the owners of the land, the licence to deposit the debris on the mountain side did not authorise depositing it in a negligent manner, or in such a manner as to cause injury or nuisance to neighbouring owners or occupiers.—A.-G. v. CORY BROTHERS & CO., KENNARD v. CORY BROTHERS & CO., [1921] 1 A. 350. Conduct of water for domestic purposes — Escape from defective supply pipe.] — Pltf. occupied for business purposes the ground floor & defts. the second floor of the same house, respectively, as tenants from year to year. There was a water closet on defts.' premises to & of which they alone had access & use. After their respective premises had been closed on a Saturday evening, water percolated from the water closet through the first floor to pltf.'s premises, & caused damage to his stock-in-trade. The overflow of the water was owing to the valve of the supply pipe to the pan having got out of order & failed to close, & the waste pipe being choked with paper. The defects could not be detected without examination, & defts. did not know of them, & were guilty of no negligence :—Held : there was no obligation on defts. to keep in the water at their peril ; & they were not liable to pltf. for the damage.—ROSS v. FEDDEN (1872), L. 354. Use of private house as stable.]—Annoyance caused by the unusual use of a house may be a nuisance where like annoyance from the ordinary use of it would not be.

The occupier of a house in a street in London had, many years ago, converted the ground floor into a stable. In 1871 a new occupier altered the stable so that the noise of the horses was an annoyance to the next door neighbour, & prevented him from letting his house as lodgings :—Held : the fact of horses having been previously kept in the stable, but so as not to be an annoyance, did not deprive the neighbour of his right to have the nuisance restrained.—BALL v. RAY (1873), 8 Ch. 356. —— Use of creosoted wood for street paving.]—By a tramway co.'s special Act the co. were bound to pave a certain road with wood. There were then two methods of wood paving in general use, one being with blocks of hard Jarrah wood, & the other with blocks of soft creosoted wood. The co. paved the road with soft creosoted wood, as being more suitable for the locality. Particles of gaseous fumes from the creosoted blocks caused damage to pltf.'s market garden, which adjoined the road. In an action against the co. to recover for the damage so caused, the jury found that the wood paving used caused the damage :—Held : the use of creosoted wood was a non-natural user of the land, which rendered defts. liable ; & there being two modes of wood paving, & the co. having adopted that mode which caused the damage, they were not protected by their special Act, & were therefore liable for the damage caused to pltf.'s market garden.—WEST v. BRISTOL TRAMWAYS CO., [1908] 2 K. h. Growth of noxious weeds.]—An occupier of land is under no duty at common law to keep down a noxious weed, such as prickly pear, growing naturally on his land so as to prevent it from spreading or extending to his neighbour's land ; & if owing to his failure to keep it down it grows in such a way as to damage his neighbour's fence that is not sufficient to render him liable.—SPARKE v. OSBORNE (1908), 7 C. Deft. failed to destroy the weed, though notified to do so by the weed inspector ; & the seed was deposited upon pltf.'s land, & destroyed a portion of the pltf.'s wheat crop :—Held : the weed is a noxious one, within the meaning of 7 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 2 (Alta.) ; & deft. was liable to pltf. for the breach of the statutory

357. User for ordinary trade purpose.]—Conduct which does not interfere with the ordinary comfort or enjoyment of life, or injuriously affect an ordinary trade, does not become a nuisance merely because it is injurious to a particular trade of a specially delicate nature.

R. rented one floor of a warehouse from K. for the purpose of storing brown paper. Subsequently K., for the purposes of his business, took to heating the cellar beneath R.'s floor. Brown paper is sold by weight, & the heat from K.'s cellar, though not sufficient to interfere with the ordinary comfort or enjoyment of R.'s floor as a living room, or with the use of it for the ordinary purposes of a paper merchant's warehouse, diminished the weight of R.'s brown paper by drying up the moisture in it, & also, by drying the air, prevented the paper increasing in weight, as intended, by absorbing fresh moisture. K. was aware when he let the floor that it was taken for the purpose of storing paper, but not that the paper was of a particular kind requiring a special temperature:—Held: under the above circumstances, the heating did not amount to a nuisance, or to a breach by K. of any implied covenant for quiet enjoyment for keeping the premises fit for the purposes for which they were let.—ROBINSON v. KILVERT (1889), 41 Ch. For the purpose of their business they had on their premises a heap of bones, which caused large numbers of rats to assemble there. The rats made their way from defts.' premises on to pltf.'s land, & ate his corn, causing substantial loss, in respect of which pltf. claimed damages from defts. It was not proved that the bones kept by defts. were excessive or unusual in quantity:—Held: no cause of action had been established against defts.—STEARN v. PRENTICE BROTHERS, LTD., [1919] 1 K. There was also practice of music & singing at other times, & occasional musical evenings:—Held: this was not an unreasonable user of the house which would be restrained at the suit of the adjoining tenant. The adjoining tenant was himself restrained from causing or permitting noises in his house so as to annoy pltf., the ct. being satisfied that such noises had been made wilfully for the purpose of annoyance.—CHRISTIE v. DAVEY, [1893] 1 Ch. 316; 62 L. The owner of C. house sold to deft. (inter alia), the western half of the western wall of C. house, this wall being treated as divided from top to bottom throughout by a vertical plane in its centre parallel to its length, the intention being that the wall should be a party wall owned by the parties in divided moieties. Deft. used, as both parties intended that he should, the fireplaces on his side of the party wall. The smoke passed from the fireplace into the connecting flue which was partly on pltf.'s land, & which became defective, & let through smoke into rooms of pltf. In an action for an injunction to restrain the nuisance:—Held: the nature of deft.'s easement was the right for smoke to pass from his fireplace into the flue connecting therewith, notwithstanding that at any point of its passage up the flue it might pass from deft.'s moiety into pltf.'s moiety of the flue, & as he had exercised this right fairly & reasonably, & in the manner in which he was intended to exercise it when the easement was granted, the action failed.—JONES v. PRITCHARD, [1908] 1 Ch. 630; 77 L. Pltf. had the right of discharging rain water from his roof on to this flat roof, & thence the water escaped through the gully down another pipe into the area, & so into deft.'s drain. Deft. had not in fact attended to or cleansed the roof or gully, & no complaint of their condition had been made to him, & there was no access to the roof from his premises. In consequence of an obstruction of the mouth of the gully the rain water accumulated on the flat roof, leaked into pltf.'s premises, & damaged same:—Held: in the absence of negligence, deft. was not liable for the damage, on the ground that he did no more than was ordinary & reasonable in conducting his own rain water from the roof to the gully, & also upon the ground that the provision of the gully was for the common benefit.—GILL v. EDOUIN (1894), 71 L. 367. Water stored in house for benefit of plaintiff—Landlord & tenant.]—Deft. was owner of a house, which he let out in floors to separate tenants. Pltfs. became tenants of the ground floor & basement under a lease, by which deft. covenanted that pltfs. might "peaceably hold & enjoy the demised premises during the term without any interruption by deft." The different floors were supplied with water by a cistern at the top of the house, & the water was distributed by a main pipe connected with the cistern, each floor having a separate branch inserted in the main pipe. Deft. paid the water rate, receiving from pltfs. one half of the amount so paid, & the cistern was not demised to any one of the tenants. In consequence of the bursting of the branch service pipe supplying the first floor, a quantity of water flowed into the basement & injured pltfs.' goods. At a trial the jury found that the branch pipe was reasonably fit & proper for the purpose for which it had been fixed, & that deft. had not been guilty of any negligence in keeping & maintaining it:—Held: under the circumstances there had been no breach of deft.'s covenant for quiet enjoyment, & as the water had been stored in the cistern for the benefit of pltfs. as well as of the other tenants, the doctrine laid down in Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, did not apply.—ANDERSON v. OPPENHEIMER (1880), 5 D. 602; 49 L. In consequence of the negligence of the plumber an overflow occurred, which damaged pltf.'s goods:—Held: deft. was not liable, since pltf. had assented to the water being on the premises, & therefore deft., by instructing a competent plumber to remedy the leakage, had discharged his duty to pltf.—BLAKE v. WOOLF, [1898] 2 Q. 372. User of own property for extraordinary purpose.]—A person who has created an electric current for his own purposes, & has discharged it into the earth beyond his control, is responsible for the damage done by that current to a neighbouring proprietor; notwithstanding that the discharge of electricity is not in itself noxious, & that the neighbouring proprietor is using his property for an extraordinary purpose in respect of which alone the damage arises.

A provisional order, which was duly confirmed by statute, authorised the construction of a tramway, & the use, with the consent of the Board of Trade, of electrical power, pneumatic power, steam power, or any mechanical power as the motive power. The lessee of the tramway, having duly obtained the consent of the Board of Trade, worked the same by electrical power upon the singlewire trolley system. Under that system the electric current passes from the generating station along a single overhead wire above the tramway rails, & returns, after passing through the motors in the cars, by means of the rails & an uninsulated copper wire connected thereto. The current employed was of considerable strength & of varying intensity, & acted, whilst passing through the overhead conductor, upon the current passing along the neighbouring wires of a telephone co., & also acted by leakage from the uninsulated wire to the earth returns of the telephone co., upon the apparatus of the co. The effect of this disturbance was to seriously interfere with & impair the efficiency of part of the system of the telephone co.; the currents employed by them being very weak as compared with the tramway currents, & their apparatus being peculiarly susceptible to electrical influence.

In an action by the telephone co. & a subscriber against the lessee of the tramway for an injunction to restrain him from working the tramway so as to occasion a nuisance to pltfs., as owners or users of telephonic lines & electric circuits, or so as to interfere with their property or business:—Held: (1) the action was maintainable on the ground that the deft. was using his property for a non-natural or extraordinary purpose, & was responsible for the damage caused thereby to a neighbouring proprietor.

374. Act of trespasser.]—Deft. was the owner in possession of a vacant house in a street, with an area which adjoined the highway. One of the rails of the area railings had been broken away by boys playing football in the street, & consequently, a gap had been created in the railings. Pltf., a child, got through this gap from the street, & was clambering along inside the railings, when he fell into the area, & sustained injuries through the fall. In an action brought on his behalf to recover damages from deft. in respect of his injuries, the jury found, in answer to questions left to them, that the area was, when the accident happened, a nuisance, but that deft. did not know, at the time of the accident, that the rail had been removed, that such a time had not elapsed after its removal that he would have known of it at the time of the accident, if he had used reasonable care, & that he had used reasonable care to prevent the premises from becoming dangerous to persons using the highway:—Held: upon these findings, deft. was not liable in respect of the nuisance created upon his premises by the action of trespassers; the nuisance could not be regarded as the cause of pltf.'s injuries, inasmuch as he did not fall through the gap in the railings while using the highway, but got through the gap in order to clamber along inside the railings.

The judgment of BRAMWELL, B., in Nichols v. Marsland, No. 376, post, very happily illustrates the view which I take. He says with regards to water stored in an artificial pool, "But suppose a stranger let it loose, would deft. be liable? If so, then if a mischievous boy bored a hole in a cistern in any London house, & the water did mischief to a neighbour, the occupier of the house would be liable. That cannot be. Then, why is deft. liable if some agent over which she has no control lets the water out?" Then he takes as another illustration the case of a stack of chimneys, & says, "could it be said that no one could have a stack of chimneys except on the terms of being liable for any damage done by their being overthrown by a hurricane or an earthquake?" Further on he differentiates such cases from cases like Rylands v. Fletcher, No. 311, ante, & says, "I am by no means sure that, if a man kept a tiger, & lightning broke his chain, & he got loose & did mischief, that the man who kept him would not be liable. But this case, & the case I put of the chimneys, are not cases of keeping a dangerous beast for amusement, but of a reasonable use of property in a way beneficial to the community." It is for the benefit of the community that property should be used in a manner which has been found to be convenient to the public (FARWELL, L.J.).—BARKER v. HERBERT, [1911] 2 K. B. 633; 80 L. J. On deft.'s land were artificial pools containing large quantities of water. These pools had been formed by damming up with artificial embankments a natural stream which rose above deft.'s land & flowed through it, & which was allowed to escape from the pools successively by weirs into its original course. An extraordinary rainfall caused the stream & the water in the pools to swell so that the artificial embankments were carried away by the pressure, & the water in the pools, being thus suddenly loosed, rushed down the course of the stream & injured pltf.'s adjoining property. Pltf. having brought an action against deft. for damages, the jury found that there was no negligence in the construction or maintenance of the works, that the rainfall was most excessive, & amounted to vis major:—Held: the action was not maintainable.

A local authority, authorised under the Electric Lighting Acts to supply electricity within their district, had as part of their system, a brick built chamber under the pavement of a street within their district, including a box containing electric cables or wires & a fusing apparatus which acted as a kind of safety valve whenever the electric current was overloaded. The construction of the chamber & box was that generally adopted by suppliers of electricity. When the fusing took place, electric sparks were emitted from the fuse. Near the chamber were the gas mains of two gas cos., & gas frequently escaped from the mains & found its way into the chamber. This chamber was periodically examined, but it was found impossible to prevent the gas entering therein. An explosion occurred in this chamber, caused by a spark from the fusing which took place at the time coming into contact with a mixture of air & gas in the chamber, with the result that pltf., who was walking on the pavement close to the chamber, was injured. In an action brought by him against the local authority for damages for personal injuries the jury found, in answer to questions put to them by the county ct. judge with the consent of both parties, that the chamber did not constitute a nuisance, & that defts. were not guilty of negligence in having the chamber improperly constructed, & they assessed the damages, if recoverable, at £25. The judge entered judgment for defts.:—Held: his decision was right.—GOODBODY v. POPLAR BOROUGH COUNCIL (1914), 84 L. J. K. B. 1230; 79 J. P. 218; 13 L. G. R. 166, D. C.

On the leakage being discovered by the railway co.'s servants, every effort was made by the railway co. to stop it. Power to carry on trade causing nuisance—Lease of colliery.]—A colliery co. were sub-lessees of land leased to a tinplate co., with power to that co. to carry on on the demised premises the trades authorised by their memorandum of assocn., which included the trade of miners. A butcher held the adjacent land under a subsequent lease from the same landowner subject to all rights & easements belonging to any adjoining & neighbouring property, & he built thereon a slaughter-house & sausage factory. Subsequently the colliery co. erected on the land demised to them screening apparatus near the butcher's trade buildings & as a result of their screening operations coal dust was deposited on these buildings. In an action of nuisance by the butcher against the colliery co. the jury found that a nuisance was caused by the co., but that the screening was carried on in a reasonable manner, & in the way which was usual in the district, & without negligence:—Held: the grant of the right to carry on the trade of miners did not authorise the committal of a nuisance, in the absence of proof that the trade could not be carried on otherwise, & pltf. was not precluded by the terms or the circumstances of the grant from obtaining relief.—PWLLBACH COLLIERY CO., LTD. v. WOODMAN, [1915] A. 387. —— Effect of impossibility of user without nuisance—Sale of land for tipping refuse.]—A sale of land to a local authority for the purpose of tipping refuse thereon by a vendor who retains adjoining land does not impliedly authorise the local authority to tip refuse in such a way as to cause a nuisance on the adjoining land when such tipping can be done without causing the nuisance.

Qu.: whether, in the event of it being impossible to use the land for tipping without creating the nuisance, the local authority would be so authorised.

An owner of land conveyed a portion thereof to a local authority for the purpose of tipping refuse thereon, the local authority purchasing the same under the powers given to them by the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), & two local Acts. Subsequently the owner of the remaining portion sold it to a purchaser, who formed a street thereon & built houses abutting on the said street. The local authority acting under their powers, from time to time deposited refuse on the land purchased by them, with the result that the deposit, gradually increasing in size & becoming impervious to rain water, caused the rain water, which previously to the deposit flowed in a direction away from the street, to be diverted & overflow into the street & form holes or gullies therein dangerous to passers by. Pltf., lawfully passing through the street, fell into one of these gullies & sustained personal injuries:—Held: the gully in the street was a nuisance caused by defts. without justification, & they were liable to pltf. in damages for the injuries sustained by him.—PRIEST v. MANCHESTER CORPN. 389. Duty of neighbouring owner.]—The repairing & amending of a ruinous house is primâ facie the duty of him who occupies the premises & does not devolve upon the owner merely as such.

There is no obligation towards a neighbour to repair cast by law on the owner of a house, merely as owner, or to keep it in repair in a lasting & substantial manner; the only duty is to keep it in such a manner & in such a state that the neighbours may not be injured by its fall. A house may therefore be in a ruinous state provided it be shored up sufficiently; or a house, if it be ruinous, may be pulled down altogether. The owner is not bound to keep it in a state of substantial repair. All he is bound to do is to prevent it from being a nuisance (POLLOCK, C.B.).—CHAUNTLER v. ROBINSON (1849), 4 Exch. 163; 19 L. J. 405. —— ——.]—In considering whether a nuisance has been caused to pltf. through interference with his comfort & that of his family in the occupation of his house, according to ordinary notions prevalent among reasonable men & women, by reason of noise from the working of defts.' machine, regard must not be had to defts.' operations in the abstract & by themselves, but in connexion with all the circumstances of the locality, & in particular in reference to the nature of the trades usually carried on there, & the noises & disturbance existing prior to the commencement of defts.' operations; & if after taking these circumstances into consideration there is a serious & not merely a slight additional interference with pltf.'s comfort as above defined, it is the duty of the ct. to interfere. Pltf. had for many years carried on business as a dairyman & resided with his family in a part of the City of London which was almost entirely devoted to the printing trade. There was no appreciable disturbance at night caused by the printing works. In 1904 defts. took the house next door to pltf.'s house & erected a printing machine of modern improved type in the basement, which was worked, when necessary, at night. In an action for an injunction:—Held: the working of the machine at night caused a serious additional disturbance to pltf. & his family, so as to constitute a nuisance, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction.—POLSUE & ALFIERI, LTD. v. RUSHMER, [1907] A. In an action for an injunction:—Held: (1) pltfs. were not, because their premises were used as a place of worship, entitled to anything more than the ordinary amount of quiet in a town, the character of the neighbourhood & the surrounding circumstances must be considered, the law did not regard trifling inconveniences, & everything of the sort must be looked at from a reasonable point of view; (2) on the evidence, though the sound might cause irritation & annoyance to sensitive persons it did not amount to a legal nuisance, & no injunction ought to be granted.—HEATH v. BRIGHTON CORPN. Seventeen years after the grant of the lease defts. proceeded to demolish the floor of the passage & remove the "tie" girders in order to make a timber cartway from the entrance in Aldermanbury down to the level of the basement in the rear of the building for the purpose of carting building materials & debris to & from the Guildhall across their property in rear of the demised premises. (4) A nuisance may be redressed by action, or by the party grieved entering & abating the nuisance, but in this latter case he shall not have an action nor recover damages.—BATEN'S CASE (1610), 9 Co. Rep. 53 b; 77 E. R. 810.

The abater makes himself his own judge, & proceeds at his own hazard to destroy the thing which he considers as an infringement of his right; whereas in an action, the invasion of his property meets with a fair discussion, & obtains for him a proper recompense without the previous destruction of the thing in dispute (EYRE, C.J.).—KIRBY v. SADGROVE (1797), 1 Bos. & P. 13; 3 Anst. 892; 145 E. SUB-SECT. 2.—BY PRIVATE PERSONS.

A. In General.

438. Not regarded with favour.]—A person who is merely entitled as one of the public to use a bridge carrying the highway over a river is not justified in entering on another person's land, & re-erecting the bridge which has been allowed to fall into a state of decay. An operation of this nature cannot properly fall under the term "abatement," even if the right to "abate" can be said to exist at all in the case of a nuisance arising from mere non-feasance.

The right of abatement by individuals is not regarded with favour by the law (COLLINS, L.J.).—CAMPBELL DAVYS v. LLOYD, [1901] 2 Ch. 518; 70 L. J. Ch. 714; 85 L. T. 59; 49 W. R. 710; 17 T. L. R. 678; 45 Sol. Jo. 670, C. A.

439. When abatement allowed — Nuisance arising from act of omission—Only in cases of emergency.]—(1) The security of lives & property may sometimes require so speedy a remedy as not to allow time to call on the person on whose property the mischief has arisen, to remedy it. In such cases an individual would be justified in abating a nuisance from omission without notice. In all other cases of such nuisances, persons should not take the law into their own hands, but follow the advice of LORD HALE & appeal to a ct. of justice (BEST, J.).

Held: the exercise of defts.' right to use the cellar for storing vegetables was limited by the general right of the public, & they had no right to infringe upon or interfere with the enjoyment of pltf.'s premises, & pltf. was entitled to recover for the damages sustained in the business, & those incurred in consequence of the illness.—MALCOLM v. BROWN, 16 C. C. Private Nuisances.

(a) In General.

457. Right to enter on land—General rule.]—If a man in his own soil erect a thing which is a nuisance to another, as by stopping a rivulet, & so diminishing the water used by him for his cattle; the party injured may enter on the soil of the other & abate the nuisance, & justify the trespass; & this right of abatement is not confined merely to nuisances to a house, to a mill, or to land.—RAIKES v. TOWNSEND (1804), 2 Smith, K. 460. —— To save life.]—HOWARD v. FRITH (1666), 2 Keb. 58; 84 E. R. 37.

461. —— Nuisance caused by building house.]—If H. builds a house so near mine that it stops my lights, or shoots the water upon my house, or is in any other way a nuisance to me, I may enter upon the owner's soil & pull it down; & for this reason only a small fine was set upon deft. in an indictment for a riot in pulling down some part of a house, it being a nuisance to his lights, & the right found for him in an action for stopping his lights.—R. v. ROSEWELL (1699), 2 Salk. 459; 91 E. R. 397.

462. —— ——.]—The general rule that an individual may abate a nuisance by which he suffers injury, applies where the nuisance complained of is a house or other permanent building. A person deprived of the enjoyment of a right of common by an unlawful erection or obstruction, may abate it. But such a right cannot be exercised when the house is in the actual occupation of any person, as such a proceeding would have a direct tendency to cause a breach of the peace.—PERRY v. FITZHOWE (1846), 8 Q. B. 757; 15 L. J. Q. B. 239; 7 L. T. O. S. 180; 10 J. P. 600; 10 Jur. 799; 115 E. R. 1057.

463. —— To extinguish fire.]—If a man makes a bonfire upon his premises dangerous to the neighbourhood, it amounts in law to a nuisance, & it will be lawful to enter upon the premises & abate it; & for this purpose to use such amount of violence as may be necessary to overcome any resistance which may be offered to the endeavour to put it out.—R. v. GREEN (1847), 11 J. P. 246, N. P.

—— Necessity for notice.]—See Sub-sect. 2, C. (b), post.

464. How right of abatement to be exercised—Right to interfere with property of wrongdoer—Only so far as necessary to abate nuisance.]—Pltf., who had a right to irrigate his meadow by placing a dam of loose stones across a small stream, & occasionally a board or fender, fastened the board by means of two stakes, which had never been done by his predecessors. Deft., who had rights on the same stream, removed the stakes & the board also. A verdict having been given for pltf. in an action for such removal, the ct. refused to set it aside; holding, that deft. had no right to remove the board as well as the stakes, on the ground that the stakes gave the board a character of permanency incompatible with her own rights.—GREENSLADE v. HALLIDAY (1830), 6 Bing. 379; 4 Moo. & P. 71; 8 L. J. O. S. C. P. 124; 130 E. R. 1326.

465. —— —— —— By least injurious means.]—In abating a nuisance to his property, a man may be justified in interfering, so far as is necessary, with the property of the wrongdoer, but not in interfering with the property of innocent third persons; &, consequently, where there are alternative modes of abating the nuisance, he is bound to choose that mode which may inflict damage, however great, on the wrongdoer, rather than that which would be productive of mischief, however small, to innocent third persons or to the public.—ROBERTS v. ROSE (1865), L. R. 1 Exch. 82; 4 H. & C. 103; 35 L. J. Ex. 62; 13 L. T. 471; 30 J. P. 5; 12 Jur. N. S. 78; 14 W. R. 225, Ex. Ch.

467. —— ——.]—Where a party has a limited right, & exercises that limited right in excess so as to produce a nuisance, the only remedy & the only way the party can protect himself is by stopping the whole. That is so very plain & clear upon the good sense of the matter, that it hardly wants an authority, that if a man has a limited right to the use of a window, & he enlarges it considerably, the only way that the person who is annoyed by the enlargement of the window & can prevent that nuisance is, by erecting a barrier & stopping the hole up if a party is in that way prevented from the exercise of a limited right, because he has turned it into a larger claim, all he can do is to reduce the window to its proper size, & insist on having it in the altered condition tolerated, & overlooking the surrounding tenements in the neighbourhood (POLLOCK, C.B.).—COCKWELL v. RUSSELL (1856), 28 L. 472. Before entry on land—General rule.]—It is true that where a person desires to abate a nuisance, which can only be abated by going on the land of the person from whom the nuisance proceeds, he must usually give notice of his intention to do so. . . . But in the cases . . . where a man proposes to abate a nuisance exclusively by doing acts upon his own land without going upon the land of his neighbour from whom the nuisance proceeds, the same reasoning does not seem to me to apply (LORD DAVEY).—LEMMON v. WEBB, [1895] A. was discharged. B. moved for an injunction to restrain the local board, as sole defts., from allowing the sewage to pass into the ditch, & so causing a nuisance :—Held : (1) the local board had power, both at common law & also under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), to stop physically the flow of sewage through the pipe, even though in so doing they might also stop the flow of surface water, since A. was exercising his limited right in excess so as to produce a nuisance ; (2) it being therefore possible for the board to abate the nuisance without instituting legal proceedings, or devising a new system of drainage, or creating a greater nuisance than that which was to be abated, B. was entitled to compel the board to do so. — CHARLES v. FINCHLEY LOCAL BOARD (1883), 23 Ch. 481. ——.]—If pltf. declare as reversioner for an injury done to his reversion, the declaration must allege it to have been done to the damage of his reversion, or must state an injury of such a permanent nature as to be necessarily injurious to his reversion ; otherwise the want of such allegation will be cause for arresting the judgment.

Where pltf. declared as reversioner of a yard & part of a wall which W. occupied as tenant to him, & that deft. on, etc., & on divers days, etc., wrongfully placed on the said part of the wall quantities of bricks & mortar, etc., & thereby raised it to a greater height than before, & placed pieces of timber, etc., on the said wall, overhanging the yard, per quod pltf. during all the time lost the use of the said part of the wall, & also by means of the timber, etc., overhanging the wall, quantities of rain & moisture flowed from the wall upon the yard & thereby the yard & said part of wall have been injured, to the damage of pltf., etc., without stating that his reversion was prejudiced ; the ct. arrested judgment.—JACKSON v. PESKED (1813), 1 M. & S. 234 ; 105 E. 483. —— Of permanent character.]—To entitle a reversioner to maintain an action for an injury to his reversion, the injury must be of a permanent character.

Deft. erected buildings & furnaces adjoining premises occupied by a tenant of pltf., & caused fires, smoke & noises, to the great annoyance of the tenant, & so as to lessen the marketable value of pltf.'s reversion :—Held : the causing the noise, fires & smoke, being acts of a temporary character, & such as may be discontinued at any time before the end of the tenant's term, were not sufficient to enable pltf., the landlord, to maintain an action for injury to his reversion, the marketable value being lessened not by reason of what had been done, but of what it was apprehended might be done at a future time.—SIMPSON v. SAVAGE (1856), 1 C. 494. Dust & dirt—Erection of station by railway company.]—The co., in the execution of the powers of their Act, had erected a railway station & embankment near a house used as a starch manufactory, & had thereby obstructed its lights & caused damage to it by the dust & dirt drifted from the station, etc. The house was erected before Nov. 30, 1835, had not been specified in the schedule, nor omitted therefrom by mistake, & no consent in writing to the construction of the station or embankment had been obtained from the owner or any other person interested in the house :—Held : the co. were liable in an action on the case at the suit of the reversioner for such damage, & pltf. was not confined to the remedy provided by the Act for compensation.—TURNER v. SHEFFIELD & ROTHERHAM RY. 496. —— Erection of hoarding.]—Pltf. was the owner in fee of a cottage, deft. owned some land immediately adjoining. Pltf. alleged that deft. had erected on pltf.'s land a hoarding on poles in order to block out the access of light to a window in the cottage, & had in so doing committed a trespass. Pltf. also alleged that the poles & hoarding produced a rattling & creaking noise which was an intolerable nuisance to pltf. & his tenants. Pltf. claimed an injunction to restrain the trespass & the nuisance. At the trial it was proved that the cottage was in the occupation of a weekly tenant of pltf., who was not a party to the action. There was no evidence that the acts of deft. had caused any diminution of value of, or other injury to, the reversion :—Held : the poles & hoarding not being of such a permanent character as to injure the reversion, pltf. could not maintain an action for trespass ; & the erection of the poles on pltf.'s land was too trifling an injury to entitle pltf. to an injunction.

Where a reversioner's possessory rights are being seriously injured by an act for which he would obtain very trifling damages at law, an injunction, being his only adequate remedy, may be granted.—COOPER v. CRABTREE (1882), 20 Ch. 498. But, if the jury negative actual damage, pltf. cannot have judgment.

f. Erection of stable.]—Deft. having erected a stable on his own ground, adjoining a dwelling house owned by pltf. & rented to W. :—Held : not such a nuisance as would support an action by pltf. as reversioner, though it was shown that he had been obliged in consequence of it to accept a lower rent for his house.—LAWRASON v. PAUL (1854), 11 U. 500. Obstruction of access to wharf.]—Pltf., in 1839, with the assent of co., made a siding on his land connecting the railway with a wharf, part of which was in his own occupation & other part in that of certain tenants; & down to the year 1857 the co. carried coals & other goods for pltf. & his tenants, placing the trucks on the siding & so sending them down to the wharf. In the course of that year, however, the co., with a view, as the jury thought, of diverting the trade from pltf.'s wharf to another wharf in which they were interested, gave pltf. notice, under another sect. of their Act, that, after Sept. 30, they would no longer provide him with locomotive power for the conveyance of his goods along their line: & on Oct. 1, they placed carriages & other things across the junction, for the purpose, as the jury found, of permanently obstructing & preventing pltf. & his tenants having access to the wharf by means of their railway. Neither pltf. nor his tenants had availed themselves at this time of the authority given to them by the Act of Parliament to provide locomotive power of their own, & consequently they were not in a position to be actually obstructed. The tenants, however, finding their trade destroyed, removed from pltf.'s wharf, & carried their business to the co.'s wharf:—Held: these wrongful acts of the co. constituted such a permanent obstruction & injury to pltf.'s right to the use of his siding as to entitle him as reversioner to maintain an action.—BELL v. MIDLAND RY. 501. Removal of support by mining.]—In an action on the case by pltfs. as reversioners, the declaration alleged, amongst other things, that deft. wrongfully, carelessly, negligently, & improperly, & without leaving any proper or sufficient support in that behalf, worked the mines, & dug & got the minerals out of the mines, near to the said messuage, the reversion of which was pltfs.' whereby the foundations of the messuages, etc., were greatly injured, & the ground on which the building stood swagged:—Held: this part of the declaration was good, notwithstanding there was no allegation that pltfs. had any right to have the messuage supported by the soil under which deft. got the mines. If it had appeared in the declaration in this case that the soil in which the mines were was deft.'s, or that deft. had all the right to get the mines which the owners of the adjoining soil had, the objection would have been fatal.—JEFFRIES v. WILLIAMS (1850), 5 Exch. 792; 20 L. 512. Vibration—Electric generating station.]—Deft. council, under the powers of a provisional order, erected an electric generating station in proximity to houses of which pltfs. were lessees or occupiers. The order provided that nothing therein should exonerate the undertakers from an action for nuisance in the event of any being occasioned by them. In an action for an injunction it was admitted by defts. that the vibration of their machinery created an actionable nuisance unless such nuisance was excusable as being of a merely temporary nature, but they alleged that after experiments & alterations of the machinery the nuisance would abate, & that as the machinery was not yet completed in its final form, but only in course of construction, an action would not lie against them. The corpn. claimed under a grant from Queen Elizabeth. Various acts inconsistent with their claim were from time to time done by the corpn., one of which was that they accepted a grant of part of the beach from a private individual as late as 1832. On bill filed to restrain the depositing the earth :—Held : the acts, inconsistent with the title they claimed, done by the corpn., though they might be of great importance in a question between the Crown & the corpn., could not be set up by deft. against the admitted acts of ownership done by them.—HASTINGS CORPN. v. IVALL (1874), L. 526. Tenant under building agreement—Giving right of entry only—Removal of shingle from & placing bathing machines on sea shore.]—In an action to restrain the removal of shingle from, & the placing of bathing machines upon, a part of the foreshore of the sea at M., pltf. claimed to be tenant in possession of the locus in quo under a building agreement granted him by the lord of the manor of M., who was tenant for life of the property under a settlement. By his statement of defence deft. set up a forty years' uninterrupted user & enjoyment of the locus in quo by himself & his predecessors in title for the purposes complained of, & denied that pltf. was or ever had been in possession of the locus in quo " save subject to the right of deft." :—Held : on the true construction of the building agreement pltf. had no estate whatever in the locus in quo, but only a right of entry thereon for the purposes of that agreement, & therefore could not maintain the action.—LAIRD v. BRIGGS (1881), 19 Ch. 527. Licencee—Wife of manager of company—Nuisance by vibration.]—Defts., who were the owners of considerable house property, let a house to a tenant who subsequently sub-let it to a co. whose manager resided on the premises with his wife, pltf., & his family ; defts. were not liable to do any repairs to the house. In the lavatory of the house was a water tank, which became insecure, owing, as was alleged, to the vibration caused by an engine & machinery upon adjoining premises of defts., which were used by them for the purpose of generating electricity for the lighting of their property. Complaints of the insecurity of the water tank were made by pltf. & her husband to the tenant, who forwarded them to defts. Ultimately defts. sent two workmen, who were their own servants, to do the necessary repairs, & an iron bracket was fixed underneath the tank to support it. Three months afterwards the bracket fell upon pltf. & seriously injured her. The jury found that the bracket fell by reason of the working of defts.' engine, that the working of the engine amounted to a nuisance, & that the work of repair in putting up the bracket was done in an improper & negligent manner & the apparatus left in a condition dangerous to persons properly using the lavatory:—Held: pltf. had no cause of action against defts. on the ground of nuisance, because she had no interest in the premises or right of occupation in the proper sense of the term.

A person in the position of pltf., who was in the premises as a mere licensee, had no right to dictate to Witherby & Co. which course they should take . . . it was a matter entirely for the tenant & a person who is merely present in the house cannot complain of a nuisance, which has in it no element of a public nuisance (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—MALONE v. LASKEY, [1907] 2 K. 529. Attorney-General.]—(1) A bill in this ct. to restrain nuisances extends to such only as are nuisances at law, & the fears of mankind, though reasonable ones, will not create a nuisance.

530. ——.]—Injunction granted, on information & bill, upon the ground of public nuisance, to restrain the magistrates of a county from cutting the timbers supporting the roadway of a bridge, which timbers & roadway, at the place proposed to be cut, were within their jurisdiction, but of which the other extremity was within the jurisdiction of a different county.

Principles on which cts. of equity interfere by injunction, in cases of apprehended nuisance to the public.

In informations & proceedings for the purpose of preventing public nuisances, the ordinary course is for the A.-G. to take it on himself to sue, as representing the public, but it is equally certain that individuals, who conceive themselves aggrieved, may come forward & ask the assistance of the ct. to prevent a public nuisance, from which they have individually sustained damage (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—A.-G. v. FORBES (1836), 2 My. & Cr. 123; 40 E. 550. ——.]—To entitle a private person to maintain an action for a thing which amounts to a public nuisance, he must show that he has sustained a particular damage or injury other than & beyond the general injury to the public, & that such damage is direct & substantial. Pltf. kept a coffee house in a narrow street near Covent Garden. Defts. carried on an extensive business as auctioneers in the same neighbourhood, having an outlet at the rear of their premises next adjoining pltf.'s house, where they were constantly loading & unloading goods into & from vans. The vans intercepted the light from pltf.'s coffee shop to such an extent that he was obliged to burn gas nearly all day, & access to the shop was obstructed by the horses standing in front of the door, & the stench arising from their frequent staling there rendered pltf.'s dwelling incommodious & uncomfortable:—Held: the evidence disclosed such a direct & substantial private & particular damage to pltf. beyond that suffered by the rest of the public, as to entitle him to maintain an action.

The injury must be shown to be of a substantial character, not fleeting or evanescent . . . in order to entitle a person to maintain an action for damage caused by that which is a public nuisance, the damage must be particular, direct & substantial (BRETT, J.).—BENJAMIN v. STORR (1874), L. 555. Nuisance affecting property owned by authority.]—A.-G. v. LOGAN, No. 263, ante.

556. ——.]—A lane in the seaside town of S., which ran from the High Street to the top of the cliff, & varied from 6 feet to 4 feet 4 inches in width, had in 1811 been set out under an award by the Inclosure Comrs. under the S. Inclosure Act, 1809, as a public footpath. In 1903 the S. Urban District Council erected in the centre of the footpath an iron post to prevent the lane being used for wheeled vehicles. Deft. having overthrown the post, the district council brought an action against him in respect of the alleged trespass, claiming damages & an injunction; & claiming further a declaration that the lane was a public footpath vested in the council & under the council's control, & that it was not a carriageway. Deft. contended that the land was a public highway for all persons to go & return on foot, & with all manner of beasts & vehicles, & alleged that since the award of the comrs. there had been a dedication of the way as a cart road. Alternatively, he contended that before or since the award there had been a private right for the class consisting of the owners & occupiers of S. to use the way for carts. The evidence showed, on the one hand, that when carts were driven through the lane the foot passengers were obstructed, & had to wait until the carts had completed their passage, &, on the other hand, that for more than forty years past barrow carts, sometimes drawn by donkeys or ponies, had been continuously used in the lane:—Held: (1) the action, being in substance one for damages for interference with pltf.'s property, could be maintained without the A.-G. being made a party; (2) the user for wheeled traffic was in its inception & all along a public nuisance, & no length of time could legalise it, &, as regards dedication, no one had the power to dedicate even with the consent of the local authority.—SHERINGHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HOLSEY (1904), 91 L. 560. ——.]—The declaration in effect states that an anchor, the property of defts., somehow got into a part of the river where it became a nuisance to the navigation. The circumstance of the anchor being the property of defts. does not make defts. liable for the consequences of the nuisance, unless it is shown that defts. were the persons who committed the nuisance. Here it is alleged that the anchor was in a place so as to be a nuisance to the navigation, but not that defts. committed the nuisance. It is not alleged that the obstruction was in a navigable part of the river, or that the anchor was negligently placed there, but merely that it was removed somehow or other (per CUR.).—HANCOCK v. YORK, NEWCASTLE & BERWICK RY. Upon an information being filed against the co. & their lessees, the co. by their answer admitting the polluted state of the water, but insisting on a right to use it, however foul, & saying they should probably continue to draw the water into their canal upon the expiration of the lease in April, 1866:—Held: it was no answer to the prayer for an injunction to say that the co. did not pollute the water, they having the power to draw it or not into their canal, as they pleased.—A.-G. v. BRADFORD CANAL PROPRIETORS (1866), L. 575. —— ——.]—A canal co. owned a canal bank & some land beyond it. Adjoining this land was a piece of land belonging to certain mineowners which, having been acquired by their predecessors in title for mining but found useless for that purpose, had been left unused & unoccupied by its owners. For some years a third person in return for payment purported to allow others to discharge refuse at first on the canal co.'s land & afterwards, without the knowledge or assent of the mineowners, upon their land also. The refuse was carried over the canal co.'s embankment & land & the co. charged a wayleave rent for allowing this. Early in 1920 the refuse on the mineowners' land was found to be on fire; in May, 1920, the fire was approaching the canal co.'s land, & the co., fearing that it might reach to & injure the canal, called upon the mineowners to extinguish it. Thereupon by agreement between the canal co. & the mineowners the canal co. entered upon the mineowners' land & extinguished the fire, & the mineowners paid to the canal co. half the expense of so doing, without prejudice to the legal position of the parties. Default of third party—No defence to action.]—Declaration in case, alleging that pltf. was reversioner of a house, garden, & premises, then occupied by his tenant B.; that deft. was possessed & in the occupation of a close near to the house, etc.; & that before & at the time, etc., there was a watercourse in the close, & deft., by reason of his possession of the close, ought to have scoured & kept open the watercourse so often as was necessary, to prevent the water from being obstructed, & from running out of the watercourse unto, into, & under the house, etc. Breach, deft., during the tenant's occupation, wrongfully permitted the watercourse to be obstructed for want of proper cleansing, insomuch that the water was penned back, & ran into & damaged the said house, to the injury of pltf.'s reversion. Plea, that a wall, parcel of pltf.'s said premises, was situate near to the said watercourse & to deft.'s close; &, by reason of the said wall being, through the neglect of B., the tenant in that behalf, ruinous, etc., part of the said wall, near to the said watercourse, before & at the times, etc., fell down, &, by means thereof, rubbish, etc., being part of the materials, fell into the watercourse, & the same was thereby choked up as in the declaration, & the water for a short time unavoidably was penned back, etc., & ran out, as in the declaration mentioned. Averment, that deft., in a short & reasonable time, after he had notice that the watercourse was so choked up, etc., & before action was brought, viz. on, etc., cleansed out the same, so that the water flowed as it ought to do:—Held: the alleged default of the tenant was no answer, the plea not showing that the owners & occupiers of the estate for the time being were bound to repair the wall which fell, & deft. could not excuse himself by averring that he repaired as soon as he had notice of the injury, for he became liable at the time when the injury occurred. D. Crown Grant.

604. No defence to public nuisance.]—Where a part of the sea coast or shore, being the property of the Crown, & giving jus privatum to the King, is granted to a subject for uses, or to be enjoyed so as to be detrimental to the jus publicum therein, such grant is void as to such parts as are open to such objection, if acted upon so as to effect nuisance by working injury to the public right; or it is a grant which does not divest the Crown or invest the grantee. Semble: grants of the Crown for the benefit of the King, by augmenting the revenue, founded on inquisition ad quod bonum, must be conformable with the finding, must be for the advantage of the Crown, must be acted upon promptly, must be upheld by possession & enjoyment, & the grantees must fulfil all continuing considerations, or the right of possession will not pass thereby from the Crown. Buildings, erections, & inclosures between the high & low water marks in the harbour of Portsmouth, interrupting the flux & reflux of the tide, abated by decree of the Ct. of Exch. as a nuisance, where made under the sanction & authority of the corpn. having a grant from the Crown by charter.—A.-G. v. PARMETER (1811), 10 Price, 378; 147 E. 606. ——.]—A weir appurtenant to a fishery, obstructing the whole or part of a navigable river, is legal, if granted by the Crown before the commencement of the reign of Edward I. Such a grant may be inferred from evidence of its having existed before that time. If the weir, when so first granted, obstruct the navigation of only a part of the river, it does not become illegal by the stream changing its bed, so that the weir obstructs the only navigable passage remaining. Trespass for breaking down a weir appurtenant to a fishery. Justification, that the weir was wrongfully erected across part of a public & navigable river, the Severn, where the King's subjects had a right to navigate, & that the rest of the river was choked up so that defts. could not navigate without breaking down the weir. Replication, that the part where the weir stood was distinct from the channel where the right of navigation existed, & was not a public navigable river. Rejoinder, that the part was a part of the Severn, & the King's subjects had a right to navigate there when the rest was choked up, & that the rest was choked up. Surrejoinder, traversing the right:—Held: where the Crown had no right to obstruct the whole passage of a navigable river, it had no right to erect a weir, obstructing a part, except subject to the rights of the public; & therefore, in such a case, the weir would become illegal upon the rest of the river being so choked that there could be no passage elsewhere.—WILLIAMS v. WILCOX (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 314; 3 Nev. & P. The right of navigation belongs, by law, to all the subjects of the realm, & the right to anchor is a necessary part of the right to navigate. This right never could have been interfered with by grant from the Crown.

The grant of an oyster bed in an arm of the sea below low water mark, must have been taken by the grantee, subject to the public right of navigation; & he cannot now, in respect of his ownership of the soil, make any demand, even if expressly granted to him, which in any way

The flood water afterwards broke into the canal at a point above the barricade of planks, & opposite to pltf.'s premises, which were also situated on the banks of the canal above the premises of defts., &, being penned back by the planks, the water rose in the canal until it flooded pltf.'s premises. In an action brought to recover damages for the injury so caused:—Held: defts. were not liable, on the ground that the water which did the mischief was not brought there by them, & there is no duty on the owners of a canal analogous to that on the owners of a natural watercourse, not to impede the flow of water down it.—NIELD v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. As a result of deft.'s works flood water which would otherwise have flowed on to their land but which never in fact came upon it flowed on to land of pltfs. & injured their property. In an action to recover damages for the injury so caused:—Held: defts. as owners of the land were entitled provided they used reasonable care & skill & adopted reasonable & usual means for the purpose to do what was necessary to protect their land from damage by anticipated flood, & these conditions having been fulfilled the damage sustained by pltfs. was damnum absque injuriâ for which no action would lie.—MAXEY DRAINAGE BOARD v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. When the river was in flood & rose higher than its bank some of the flood water used to flow over resps.' land, ultimately finding its way back to the river. Resps. erected an embankment from a point on their land about half a mile from the river diagonally to its bank, with the object of protecting their lands behind the embankment. The water flowing over applts.' land in time of heavy flood was thereby increased. Applt. sued resps. for damages & an injunction. It was not proved that any flood channel was obstructed, or existed, or that there was any ancient or rightful course for the flood waters across resps.' land:—Held: the action could not be maintained.—GERRARD v. CROWE, [1921] 1 A. 613. —— —— ——.]—The abatement of a nuisance by a private individual is a remedy which the law does not favour.

By a local Act of 1843 a canal constructed under previous local Acts by canalising a river was vested in applts., who were required by the Act to keep the navigation & locks, & all works to be thereafter executed for the improvement thereof, in an efficient state for the traffic thereon. In 1912 applts. raised the coping on both sides of one of their locks & the banks behind it to prevent the lock from being flooded. Resps., adjacent landowners, objected that the effect of these works was to pen back the water in the part of the canal above the lock & to occasion the flooding of their lands, & in consequence of these objections applts. removed the coping without prejudice to their rights, but they did not reduce the height of the banks. In 1924 during a heavy flood resps., without notice to applts., cut away a portion of these banks to allow the flood water to escape. In an action by applts. for an injunction to restrain resps. from interfering with the banks, resps. justified their acts as having been done in the abatement of a nuisance caused by applts. in raising the banks:—Held: there being no evidence of negligence, applts., in constructing works in the exercise of their statutory powers for the protection of their navigation, were not

SUB-SECT. 4.—DAMAGES.

See, generally, DAMAGES, Vol. XVII., pp. 78 et seq

629. Compensation for natural consequences.]—In an action by lessor against lessee for rent, the lessee counterclaimed for damages from a nuisance caused by the lessor. It appeared that the lessor during the lease had pumped water from land adjacent to the demised premises by means of powerful engines, & that the lessee's house was damaged by the vibration caused by the working of such engines, to such an extent that the premises became useless to him, & that he was obliged to remove his business to another house, & in consequence incurred expense. There was evidence that the house at the commencement of the term was old & unstable, & that a house of ordinary stability would not have been injured by the vibration:—Held: the damages recoverable by deft. were not confined to the value of the term which he had lost, but included all loss which had happened to him as a natural consequence of the wrongful acts of pltf., such as the expense of removing his business to other premises.—GROSVENOR HOTEL CO. v. HAMILTON, [1894] 2 Q. 630. ——.]—In May & Oct. 1922, some dead fish were observed in the River Wye, Derbyshire, at a spot below that from which a drain pipe leading from certain gasworks entered the river. Samples of the effluent from this pipe were taken on each occasion, which, on analysis, were found to contain matter highly poisonous to fish. The owner of the fishing rights over that part of the river affected commenced an action for an injunction & damages against the owners of the gasworks:—Held: on the evidence, it was satisfactorily proved that the effluent from the gasworks was, on each occasion, the cause of the death of the fish, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction & damages.

The damages to which pltf. is entitled are limited to such damages as are the natural & probable consequence of the defts.' wrongful acts, & are not in any way extended beyond such limit because such acts were illegal per se. In calculating these damages the ct. has to consider what is the pecuniary sum which will make good to pltf., so far as money can do so, the loss which he has suffered as the natural result of the wrong done to him (P. O. LAWRENCE, J.).—GRANBY (MARQUIS) v. BAKEWELL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1923), 87 J. P. 105; 21 L. G. R. 329.

Independently of the loss of business sustained by pltf., there was the fact that defts., who had no right to turn pltf. out of his house, made it inconvenient for him to live in it & an act of that kind, done with a high hand, is not to be paid for by a mere calculation of how many shillings or pence pltf. would have otherwise earned (WILLES, J.).—THOMPSON v. HILL (1870), L. 636. Necessity for proof—Existence of nuisance—Identity of person causing.]—In an action for a nuisance, where deft. pleads not guilty, pltf. must not only prove the existence of the nuisance, but that deft. was the person who caused it.—DAWSON v. MOORE (1835), 7 C. & P. 25, N. P.

637. Statement of immediate cause of injury.]—In declaring for a nuisance, the immediate cause of the injury must be stated; & under an averment of the remote cause, & an allegation that by means of the premises the noxious matter annoyed pltf.'s house, it is not competent to give evidence of the intermediate causes.

The declaration stated that deft. wrongfully placed & continued a heap of earth, whereby the refuse water was prevented from flowing away from his house, down a ditch at the back thereof. The evidence was, that the heap was not originally placed so as to obstruct the water, but that in process of time earth from the heap was trodden, & fell, into the ditch, & obstructed it:—Held: this was a fatal variance.—FITZSIMONS v. INGLIS (1814), 5 Taunt. 534; 128 E. Defts. appealed:—Held: as NORTH, J., had made the order after considering the circumstances of the case, the Ct. of Appeal ought not to interfere with the exercise of his discretion, there being no reason for expecting a failure of justice from the action being tried in the way he directed.—MANGAN v. METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO., [1891] 2 Ch. 551; 65 L. W., a clergyman of the Church of England, held services & delivered addresses on the seashore without the consent of pltf., & asserted that the seashore was a highway & that he had a right to do so. Pltfs. brought an action against W., claiming a declaration that he was not entitled to hold services, etc., on the seashore without their consent, & an injunction to restrain him from so doing. There was no evidence that the acts of W. caused an obstruction or led to a breach of the peace; nor did W. adduce any evidence of a prescriptive right or custom in support of his contention:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to the declaration for which they asked; but the matter was too trivial for an injunction, which must be refused.—LLANDUDNO URBAN COUNCIL v. WOODS, [1899] 2 Ch. 705; 68 L. 652. —— Such as would have entitled party to damages.]—A ct. of equity will not exercise its jurisdiction by injunction at the instance of an individual against an alleged nuisance, without a previous trial at law, or without its being clearly proved that pltf. has sustained such substantial injury as would have entitled him to a verdict for damages in an action at law.

Deft. diverted a stream as it passed through his premises, but restored it undiminished as to the quantity of water to its former channel before it reached the premises of pltf.: deft. also employed the stream, while on his premises, in a way which rendered the water unfit for ordinary use, but he alleged that the water, by the time it reached pltf.'s lands, was freed to the utmost possible extent from any noxious ingredients with which it had become impregnated; & it did not appear that any actual damage was sustained by pltf. Under these circumstances, the Lord Chancellor dissolved an injunction, which had been granted by the Vice-Chancellor, restraining deft. from diverting & using the water.—ELMHIRST v. SPENCER (1849), 2 Mac. & G. 45; 14 L. In cases of this class, where important public interests are involved, such as the improvement of the drainage of a town, the ct. will protect the private rights of the individual if affected in any material degree, but will at the same time have regard to the nature & extent of the alleged injury or nuisance & to the balance of inconvenience.—LILLYWHITE v. TRIMMER (1867), 36 L. in length which had been planted by pltf. to screen off the gasworks. The fumes & smoke from the gasworks were carried by the prevailing wind across the plantation for a distance of 100 to 200 yards on to pltf.'s premises & had destroyed & injuriously affected them to such an extent that the tops of some of the trees were dying whilst others were dead. There was no house on pltf.'s property within the affected area. In an action brought by pltf. for an injunction to restrain defts. from carrying on their works so as to cause a nuisance or injury to pltf. or his property:—Held: the fumes & smoke discharged by defts.' gasworks over pltf.'s premises caused a serious, growing, & permanent injury to pltf.'s property; the injury being of a continuous nature it was impossible to measure the damage thereby occasioned with any certainty; & the pltf. was therefore entitled to the injunction he asked.

If the owner of property, be it a house, or a garden, or a park, or anything else, not necessarily a house or structure, is so substantially injured in the reasonable enjoyment of his property as that he sustains that which is equivalent to a legal nuisance, he is entitled to an injunction to restrain the continuance of the nuisance (BUCKLEY, L.J.).—WOOD v. CONWAY CORPN., [1914] 2 Ch. 47; 83 L. 661. —— ——.]—Deft. co. had statutory power to take water from the river C. In order to obtain a larger supply they purchased land, but not in exercise of any statutory power, for the purpose of storing the flood waters. The consequence of defts.' works was to foul the water running past pltfs.' mills, & to render it less fitted for their dye works:—Held: (1) pltf. was entitled to an injunction, & was not obliged to seek compensation under the general compensation clause of Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17); (2) although pltf. might obtain damages at law, yet she was entitled, in order to avoid multiplicity of actions, to an injunction to restrain the fouling of the water.

Would this ct. have sent her away & said that she should bring action after action, instead of having her remedy by injunction? I cannot think that would have been so. . . . It is because it is most inconvenient to leave the rights of parties to be determined in that way [by bringing successive actions] . . . that this ct. has always in such cases given relief (MELLISH, L.J.).—CLOWES v. STAFFORDSHIRE POTTERIES WATERWORKS CO.
